Lois Fitzgibbons, universally liked physical education teacher at Senior high school who resigned her position at the close of the last school year, is director of the Camp Fire Girls' vacation camp at Tyee. This is her third year there in that capacity (it may even be longer) and camp routine runs as smooth as a watch.

Miss Fitzgibbons will be employed as physical ed. director at Willamette high school next fall. It will be very convenient for her, she explained. "My parents live in southeast Portland and I will be enabled to live at home."

Five or six years ago, Verne Harpham and I bought a rubber army-surplus raft, under the misapprehension that it would come in handy while retrieving ducks we hoped to shoot from lakes and ponds. Well, it is being put to mighty good use now at Camp Tyee, retrieving little Camp Fire Girls, from the swimming pool.

Joyce and Janet Harpham are its sponsors there, where both young ladies are counselors.

The old Dodge canoe road west of Oakland ain't what she used to be. From a point only a few miles from the Calapooia to its junction with the Umpqua the road is blacktopped and while as crooked as ever, certainly is smooth and dustless.

The bridge across the Umpqua below this junction, giving access to the Camp Fire Girls' camp, is undergoing re-decking and, whether from this cause or some other, is reported to be closed at certain unstated intervals. Might pay to look into this if you plan on using it. LeRoy Inman, city editor of the News-Review, and I,
