Adventists Suffer Loss In Auburn Academy Fire

AUBURN, Wash., (AP) — A fire spreading from a sawdust conveyor belt destroyed the furniture factory, boiler room and sawmill at the Auburn academy, Seventh-Day Adventist school four miles east of here.

The loss was estimated by Ray W. Fowler, an academy official, at the Auburn academy, Seventh-day Adventist school, which was being shipped out. He said insurance of $120,000 was carried.

Academy students worked in the furniture factory to help pay their way through school. It was one of the Northwest's largest producers of unpainted furniture.
