

Don't Burn up Your PAY ENVELOPE

TREES FURNISH employment for many members of this community. Some work in the forests . . . others in the mills, processing the timber crop . . . Other citizens rely for their livelihood on the trade furnished by the people employed by the forest products industries.

Burning trees hurt all of us. A blaze which consumes growing timber may destroy the pay envelope of every member of the community. Burned trees create no trade or employment.

Help keep fire out of the woods. If we work together we can lick Forest Enemy Number 1.

Remember . . . One tree will make millions of matches—
One match will destroy millions of trees—

KDND DIAL-LOG

“TWENTY QUESTIONS: It's a matter of opinion—and not Robert Burns”—as to the meaning of “Rye” in the Scotch ballad, “Comin' Thru the Rye.” Differences about the “Rye” have blossomed into something of a feud on “Twenty Questions” heard Sunday evenings on KRNR. Even Princeton university's extensive research library facilities cannot solve the problem.

The “Rye” in the song was a listener-submitted subject. Though it was guessed before the allotted 20 questions had been used, panelist Fred Van DeVenter and moderator Bill Slater, had differences as to the nature of the subject. One said it was “mineral.” The other claimed it to be “vegetable.” Van hied to Princeton's library and researched the problem more thoroughly. The Glasgow Herald, for example, claimed poet Robert Burns was thinking of the Rye river in Yorkshire, northern England. Other literary experts believed Burns was thinking of the fields of rye. Then he checked further—and discovered another intriguing complication to the problem.

The lyrics of the ballad are not from the original Robert Burns poem. They're by an anonymous author. Asks Van DeVenter, “How do you resolve that?” Certainly no problems of this
