August Produces High Employment

The month of August, despite the closure of the woods brought about by fire danger, produced high totals of employment. While there was a period of unemployment for woods workers, the majority of these people were employed in fighting fires in the area. Until such time that rains wash out the dirt roads in the more remote areas, little change is expected in the total of employed persons, according to George T. Foster, manager of the local Oregon State Employment service.

The outlook in the construction field is good at the present time. Current conditions should hold steady for the next 30 to 60 days. Reports from firms engaged in that type of work indicate little anticipated activity after that. Construction under way now consists largely of dwellings, with no major jobs in sight. Work on the Glide school has been held up pending receipt of steel, and federal restrictions are instrumental in retarding other projects.

Trade establishments expect regular slight increases until the Christmas season arrives. Claims for unemployment insurance rose sharply during August. However, very few of these were out of work long enough to realize any benefits from their claims.

The week beginning Oct. 7, 1951, is for the annual observance of National Employ the Physically Handicapped. This will be the fifth observance of the week. All employers are earnestly requested to survey their employment needs and ascertain whether or not a handicapped person could fulfill the vacancy. "It is ability, not disability that counts!" says Foster.
