Size alone is no indication of a diamond's true value

It's as great a mistake to judge a diamond by its size as it would be to say that all fat people are brilliant executives.

Diamonds, like people, have definite personalities, some flashy but off color—others more modest but flawless.

At the left you see five lovely diamond rings all with the same size diamonds and to the untrained eye identical—yet the individual characteristics of these stones make a difference of $100.00 in their true value.

We would like to show you our diamond comparison chart. There's no obligation and you will realize why it's most important to carefully select your jeweler before you select your diamond.
