Visit Of Strange Elderly Woman Ends In Suicide

SAVANNAH, Ga. — (AP) — This is the way police said it happened:

An elderly woman with a cultured southern accent went to the travelers aid desk in the Union station here and asked for directions to Savannah's best hotel. She apparently had arrived on a train from the north.

She wore an inexpensive black hat and coat, and her cotton stockings were twisted.

The travelers aid suggested a less expensive hotel, but the woman insisted on the best.

"I might spend the winter in Savannah," she said.

Soon afterwards she registered at one of Savannah's leading hotels. The name she gave was Amelia Samors; her address, Shelton, Mass. Her only luggage was a small black bag. Before she went to her room she deposited a little more than $100 with the clerk.

A day passed.

Monday afternoon her body was found in her room. There was a brief note nearby:

"73 — no survivors. The money which I have will pay the hotel bill and the funeral expenses."

Dr. Harold Smith, coroner for Chatham county, said the death was a suicide. An overdose of sedatives, perhaps.

He made the customary check. Shelton, Mass., is not listed in the U. S. postal guide. A spectacles case had only one word "Syracuse" for a clue.

The body lies unidentified in a funeral home here.
