Medford Fliers Disperse Fog

MEDFORD — Fog turned to snow, and then the sun broke through again Saturday as two Medford fliers continued their experiments in trying to disperse fog.

The two, Harvey Brandau and Eugene Kooser, seeded the fog over the Medford airport Friday with their own chemical formula. A huge hole opened in the fog within an hour.

The widened the seeded area, spreading dry ice and their special formula over Medford as well as the airport. A half-hour after they went aloft, a brief heavy snowfall started at both places. After another 1 1/2 hours visibility had increased from half-mile to two miles. The sun disappeared after 10 minutes, but the fog obviously was thinner.

The fliers now have interested a group of downtown merchants in the possibility of a winter-long fog dispersal program. The merchants believe it would encourage shoppers to come downtown. The fliers assert they can keep the area free of fog 90 percent of the time.

The fliers insist the fog-thinning Friday and Saturday was no coincidence. They claim full credit. Both pointed out that the weather forecast was for unrelieved fog. United Air lines at Portland. The airline company has not disclosed its findings.

Trees Falling By Thousands For Yule Trade

WASHINGTON — The crisp sound of thousands of axes biting through fir trees is ringing in the cold, clear air of America's forests these days.

The medley is loud because the snow-slogging woodchoppers have only one more week in which to cut the Christmas trees and send them to homes throughout the nation.

Not counting trees obtained by John Q. Public himself, Santa Claus each year looks over about 28,000,000 gayly-decorated trees which have been provided commercially for his annual trek to the United States.

About 9,000,000 are imported, mostly from Canada, and American forests yield about 19,000,000. An area in northwestern Montana and northeastern Idaho is the Christmas tree capital. About 3,000,000 green, fragrant Douglas-firs are cut annually in the deep snow of the rugged mountains near the Canadian border and Glacier park.

About one-fourth of the trees cut in the Montana-Idaho area are taken from federal forests, the rest from state and private lands.

Nationally, the federal forest service reports, about 87 percent of the Christmas trees come from private lands.

Many farmers are finding that wild-grown trees provide good business. Sale of wild trees in Montana alone adds about $1,000,000 annually to the farm income.

Farmers also own about two-thirds of the 100,000 acres of Christmas tree plantations in the nation. Nearly half the acreage is in Pennsylvania.

Cutting of trees on federal land is permitted in areas where the forest service believes the stand should be thinned for the benefit of the forest. The cutting is regulated by rangers.

The government charges only 10 to 15 cents for a three-to-six-foot Douglas-fir, but it gets as much as $1 a foot for California's Shasta firs. The Shasta firs, called "silvertips" because their dense and short needles have white tips — sell to the public for as much as $30 to $40 each.
