Christmas Carol Singers Victims Of Rocketeers
LONDON - (AP) - Hoodlums are muscling into bands of children singing Christmas carols in public.
Scotland yard reported the racketeers have taken over parties of youngsters, averaging about 10 years old, and organized them into "beats." Competitors are chased off.
The children sing carols under lighted windows and householders usually reward them with a shilling (14 cents) or so for their songs. It is an old Christmas tradition in England.
But since the hoodlums took over, the kids must turn over half their collections - which usually amounts to two or three pounds ($5.60 to $8.40 a night) - for "protection."
