TO CONSERVE FISH

Restriction Of Angling On North Umpqua River To Use Of Fly Explained

Increase in fishing and decline in the number of steelhead and spring chinook in the river have prompted the local office of the State Game Department to recommend to the Game Commission closing to fishing except by artificial fly the North Umpqua River from Rock Creek to the Soda Springs Dam.

This explanation was given by William Pitney, fish biologist, who spoke before the Roseburg Lions Club Thursday night on fishery studies of the Umpqua River.

Speaking also was J. W. Vaughn, supervisor for the Southern Oregon Region, who described the organization of the State Game Commission and its administrative department.

He discussed the procedure for setting up fishing and hunting regulations. The commission meets Jan. 11 to draft tentative fishing regulations, he said.

Final decision will be made at the commission's meeting two weeks later. Recommendations by sportsmen's groups, as well as the department's employees in the field, are considered in adopting final regulations, said Vaughn.

Steelhead do not die, but migrate downstream to the ocean to return either two or four years later, and they usually possess considerable fat on their downward journey, said Pitney.

However, fish that have been hooked and played out are usually lost for spawning purposes, he stressed.

Other Stretches Stay Open The proposed closure would affect only a 33-mile stretch of the North Umpqua. It would leave open all remaining sections of the Umpqua river and its tributaries.

Pitney pointed out that with improved road conditions up the North Umpqua, the river would be subjected within the next few years to a much greater amount of fishing even than now.

"There just isn't enough fish in the river to permit unrestricted fishing," he stated.

He said an alternative to closure except to fly fishing would be complete closing of the river for a time. But, he said, there is no biological reason to give such protection to the fish in the stream other than to salmon and steel head.

A second judgment ordered recovery of $1,370.11 to Pre-Mix Concrete, Inc. from Otis Hatcher. Allegedly, $1,087.16 is due on account to the plaintiff for goods, merchandise and supplies and $482.95 is due on account of W. H. Gerretsen, who assigned the claim to the defendant.

Also filed in the Circuit court was a district court judgment for $1,000 plus interest and attorney's fees against M. L. Gurney Phillip M. Clark and Donald Michel. Plaintiff in the case is Grace Berry.

A final Circuit court order quieted title on property owned by Buckley L. Bell and wife against any claims by Hardy O. Howard and others. The property is located east of the intersection of Main and Mosher streets in Roseburg.

RARE BEARS DIE WASHINGTON (AP)—All of the double-hybrid bear triplets, born New Year's at the Washington zoo, are dead.

They were second generation offspring of an Alaska brown bear and a polar bear. Their parents were rare and double-hybrids are rarer still.

Two of the triplets died earlier this week and the third Friday.
