Wait a minute, Delaria. The man who keeps asking me how much longer I'm going to be wants to ask me again.

American Fighter Aircraft Better Than Russian Jets, Says Secretary Of Defense

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Secretary of Defense Lovett testified Monday that the United States now has better fighter aircraft than the Russian MIGs.

He indicated, however, it may take some time to equal and pass Soviet aircraft production.

Lovett engaged in a crisp exchange with senators over relative Russian and U. S. air strength during a Congressional hearing on the proposed $52,100,000,000 military budget for 1952-53.

The defense secretary said any cut in this spending program would "increase, beyond the realms of prudence, the calculated risks already taken" in planning the program.

Sen. O'Mahoney, presiding at joint hearing of a Senate appropriations subcommittee and the Senate House Economic Committee, raised the air power question.

"A year ago we had complete command of the skies in Korea," O'Mahoney said, adding this is no longer true.

He asked Lovett when the Defense department expected to match Russian airpower.

Lovett, replying, said that after World War Two the United States "went to sleep" on its defenses while Russia pushed ahead.

Came To Make Up

"We did not demobilize—in my opinion we disintegrated," the Pentagon chief said. As a result, he added, "we have to run faster now for several years to make up a deficit in aircraft."

O'Mahoney asked if the Russians' MIG 15 is "better than our aircraft we can send" to Korea.

Lovett replied that the United States has better aircraft "in test." He said the F-86 is "a superior plane" although it weighs about one-third more than a MIG and has a slower climb.

Sen. McKeeler, D-Tenn., wanted to know how long this airplane testing must go on.

"I think we ought to put our best foot forward in Korea," he said. "I think we ought to do something out there."

Lovett, to explain the time needed to develop a new type of plane, said he would show a chart on just one contract "that is classified."

This brought a quick warning from O'Mahoney that "a representative of the Russian News Agency, Tass, is in the room."

Jean Montgomery, reporter of Congressional affairs for Tass, sat at the press table.

Security Not Involved

"No security is involved," Lovett said, spreading out a long chart of an airplane contract. It showed that on just one contract, 106 subcontracts must be let. Lovett said this was "just the first tier."

The subcommittee quit at noon until tomorrow.

Earlier, Lovett told the senators that even the $52,100,000,000 defense figure is a cutback from original estimates.

He said the Defense Department has taken a "realistic" attitude, has made new economies, and instead of attempting to reach certain goals in 1953 or 1954 it has delayed them and funds asked now will permit a program merely "expanding toward these goals."

He listed these goals as 21 full-strength divisions for the Army; 408 combat vessels and 16 carrier air groups for the Navy; three full divisions and three air wings for the Marines; and 143 wings for the Air Force. All three services would have the appropriate support type units.
