"What the child knows about music is relatively unimportant as compared with how he feels toward music. Rosenthal in Etude. Some parents seem to feel that technique... the playing of scales... the execution of the music is the most important. But most modern music educators believe that it's important first to found a firm philosophy toward music... to give the child belief and a feeling of creativity when he plays.

It's comparatively simple to learn the techniques... to play by rote the notes which are set down. But when the child has a feeling for a piece... gives it his own special interpretation... gives it something from inside himself... you can be sure he's well on the way to musical achievement.

Depend on the music teacher you've chosen to introduce technique at the proper time. And be sure to give the instructor your full cooperation so that your youngster will get a consistent guidance in his musical endeavor.

We can supply you with everything for your musical pleasure... the finest instruments, pianos, sheet music... anything. Drop in and browse around. There are friendly folks to help you at OTT & RICKETTS MUSIC STORE, 101-105 W. Cass St. Ph. 3-3202. (Paid advertisement).
