Man Shapes Lady's Back For $37.50

Something new happens every day in our fair city. Now there's a man who will reshape your back for $37.50. Mrs. Lillian Bellum of Elm Street asserts that this gentleman does a thorough job and highly recommends his services.

The gentleman in question answers to the name of Calvin W. Wolf. He feels that his unusual offer will better acquaint him with housewives. And, therefore, for the next six days he will gladly reshape any lady's chair back and seat (in fact the whole chair) for as low as $37.50.

Mr. Wolf, happy owner of the Expert Furniture Cleaners & Upholsterers, 2132 Hollis St., directly behind Richie's Root Beer Drive-In on Highway 99 North, will make no financial profit on this work—his sole endeavor is to acquaint the residents of our city with his meticulous, thorough upholstering service at (pardon the expression) dirt cheap prices.

You can't go wrong, girls. Get your back reshaped today. Remember the 'phone, please. . . . 3-3191. It's an ad.

YOUR BODY

ROSEBURG, OREGON — These health articles are written and paid for by Dr. B. A. SMITH, Chiropractic Physician, 1500 Garden Valley Road, in the interest of public health and to help you understand the body function. Look for these informative articles every Saturday.

While the pancreas is an organ of digesiton, it also has an endocrine function. The Islands of Langerhans are small masses located in the tail of the pancreas. They produce a secretion which has nothing to do with digestion but which is concerned with the metabolism of sugar. When this internal secretion is absent, the body is unable to utilize the sugar present in the circulating blood. Since the blood sugar is not removed by the demands of the tissue cells, the production of blood sugar does not follow its usual trend and the result is an excess of dextrose in the circulation. When this excess rises above the threshold of the kidney, that is, when it exceeds 180 milligrams percent, sugar will appear in the urine. If, in any way, insulin is added to the blood, the ability of the tissues to use the blood sugar is restored. When this can be done by increasing the activity of the Islands of Langerhans, the results are better than when insulin is artificially administered. Much help may be given by proper dietary control.

The general rule of the diet is to limit the carbohydrate intake, use a limited amount of fat, and give plenty of proteins. The test of success of the treatment is the disappearance of sugar in the urine. A more exact indication is the reduction of the blood sugar level to the normal of approximately 100 milligrams per 100 cc. blood.

The pancreas as a digestive organ is perhaps the most important one of the entire digestive system. Its secretion digests each of the types of food, something which no other gland can do. Hence, a disease of the pancreas, which interferes with its digesty function, is of grave significance.

Reduced production of the external secretion of the pancreas may be manifested in two ways, by undigested or partially digested fats, and by undigested or partially digested proteins in the stool.

When the lipase of the pancreatic juice is lacking, there will be an excess of undigested neutral fats. Few persons who eat considerable fatty foods are able to digest all of the fat, and normally there is a small amount in the bowel excretion. But in deficiency of the pancreatic secretion, this amount is greatly increased. The bowel discharge is oily or gray in appearance. This condition of excess fat in the stool may continue for years without any serious disturbance to health, but it marks an abnormal condition, and indicates that the body may be unable to withstand an extra strain on the digestive apparatus. Students Win Round In Fight On Coin Phones

EUGENE (AP) — Students at the University of Oregon and Willamette University have won a first-round battle with the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company to keep coin box telephones out of living organization houses.

Phone company officials have agreed to take out the coin boxes and replace them with standard business-rate phones in fraternity and sorority and co-operative living houses, provided a formal complaint to the Public Utilities Commission is dropped and the University makes no objection to leaving coin phones in dormitories.

It was the dormitory question which started things in the first place, on the Oregon State College Campus. Some three years ago, phone company officials say, college authorities wanted to know how to stop students in dormitories from running up long-distance phone bills for which the colleges had to pay. The phone company put in coin box phones as the answer, and planned to expand that program to other institutions.

Protest Effective

It got around to it at Willamette and Oregon last summer, a nd added fraternity and sorority houses to the dormitories. Then, after school had started in the fall, it prepared to do the same thing at Oregon State. The student protests brought a halt there. Then Oregon and Willamette students protested—and when coin box rates went up to a dime recently, formal complaints were prepared. That brought the change reported Friday.

Phone company officials in Portland said the whole question was under study nationally.

Power Line Fund For Ore. Fought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Utah and Idaho power companies oppose the Bonneville Power Administration's request for funds to build a government transmission line between La Grande and Baker, Ore.

A House Appropriations Subcommittee Saturday made public recent testimony of R. E. Gale, vice president, Idaho Power Co., and E. M. Naughton, assistant general manager, Utah Power and Light Co.

At hearings on appropriation requests for the year beginning July 1, they said the line is not needed.

The government proposes to build a 220,000-volt power line costing $2,250,000. The request for the coming year is $1,173,000.

The BPA says the 50-mile line is needed to tie the Northwest power pool to the Idaho Power Co. transmission system.

Gale said in his statement:

"The surplus energy which might be available for transfer over the line is wholly insufficient to justify the expenditure proposed.

"Existing facilities are completely adequate for the needs of the area and this proposed line would be merely a duplication of these facilities. . ."
