Truman Blocks Data Requested By House Probe

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Truman Friday ordered government agencies to refuse requests for a House investigating committee for data on cases they have referred to Atty. Gen. J. Howard McGrath for prosecution.

Mr. Truman, objecting to what he termed a "drag-net approach" to the committee's investigation of how McGrath has conducted the Justice Department, said "it would be impracticable and unwise for the departments and agencies to endeavor to comply with that request."

The Justice Department itself refused on Wednesday to give such information to a House judiciary subcommittee headed by Rep. Chelf (D-Ky.).

The group had asked for data on the disposal of cases referred to the department over a six-year period.

It proposes to look into charges that the department, under McGrath, has been lax in prosecution of certain tax cases, some of them involving big-time gamblers and racketeers.

With the results of the New Hampshire primaries now in official record books, the networks news and special events chiefs are checking program schedules for four other important elections in the next several weeks. First is next Tuesday's balloting in Minnesota, the "favorite son state" of ex-Gov. Harold E. Stassen, GOP aspirant. Then follow, in quick succession, preferential elections in Nebraska, Wis., and Illinois. A pattern similar to the New Hampshire coverage has been planned for these important events.

Ways To Expand Ore. Hardwood Industry Studied

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Ways to expand the Oregon hardwood industry have been under study by Jack Pfeiffer of the industrial relations section of the Oregon Forest Products laboratory on the Oregon State College campus.

Two major obstacles—lack of familiarity with hardwood operation techniques and with the market on the part of the operators—have been largely responsible for the "off and on" Oregon hardwood sales, Pfeiffer said.

These two deficiencies have been tantamount to the hardwood user who hesitates to purchase Oregon hardwood because of poor manufacture and because he can not always be sure of a steady supply.

To help clear up some of the troubles that have crippled Oregon hardwood output and to increase consumer confidence, a satisfactory hardwood log and lumber grading system will be organized. Cooperating with the laboratory will be the local hardwood interests and the U. S. Forest Products laboratory at Madison, Wis.

A larger profit in the Oregon softwood field has long overshadowed the potential hardwood industry. Most lumber mill equipment is geared to softwood production. A high-value and high-caliber product would be marketed if operators were informed of minor, but important, adjustments necessary for a switch-over, Pfeiffer said.

Oregon hardwoods, according to preliminary research at the laboratory, compare favorably in physical properties with Eastern and Southern hardwoods. It has been conservatively estimated there are 4 to 5 billion feet of hardwood sawtimber in Oregon west of the Cascades.

Ten Oregon hardwoods in order of quantity are: alder, tan oak, maple, madrone, California black oak, cottonwood, Oregon white oak, ash, chinquapin, and myrtle.

New Product Better Repair Of Aluminum

WASHINGTON (AP)—A California engineer says he has developed a product that will "rejuvenate" the art of soldering and welding of aluminum. He said it will allow many new uses for aluminum in industry.

Samuel Freedman of Santee, Calif., said the product—described as an alloy of many metals and chemicals—eliminates problems which he said have long made aluminum one of the most difficult metals to weld or solder.

He was in Washington Tuesday arranging to apply for a patent in connection with the process.

The new material, he said, will make it possible for a housewife to repair an aluminum pan just by heating the solder material in the flame of a gas stove. He calls the product "Chemalloy."

Freedman said some of the material already has been sold to 190 leading firms and government
