Truce In Korea Probable, Says Secy. Acheson

WASHINGTON (AP)—Secretary of State Acheson said Tuesday he believes the Korean truce negotiations will be successful, but he cautioned against "either optimism or pessimism" in the present stage of the prolonged talks.

Acheson said among other things:

1. The United States is "continually working" to get its Allies to provide a larger portion of troops in Korea — without success so far until the French can put a large, trained native force in the field.

2. He is confident that France, despite its recent government crisis, will carry out its commitments to the North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, and that Germany will do the same.

3. All the NATO countries are taking steps to check inflation which, by increasing costs, is a threat to their preparedness efforts.

4. The State Department hopes that negotiations to use some of Spain's facilities in the Western defense effort will bear fruit after the new ambassador to Spain, Lincoln McVeigh, arrives in Madrid with U.S. military representatives.

5. He does not know whether any new economic aid to Japan is contemplated after the peace treaty, now awaiting ratification, goes into effect.

Acheson said, too, that economic as well as military aid must be provided to other free nations or else "you are not going to get what you are seeking here"—that is, a Western European defense force strong enough to resist any Soviet aggression.
