Goldy Faces Difficult Job In Directing Labor Phase Of West Europe's Defense

PARIS, France — Daniel L. Goldy, of Portland, Oregon, who once successfully managed the physical resources on 30,000,000 acres of public lands in the Pacific Northwest, as Bureau of Land Management regional supervisor, today is occupied with another sizable task — the efficient use of manpower in Western Europe's defense and economic build-up.

The 36-year-old expert on resources and employment problems is now deputy director of the labor division for the European office of the Mutual Security Agency. MSA has incorporated the work of the Marshall plan.

In a recent interview in his Paris office, Mr. Goldy said his present job had a two-fold purpose. One called for resources development and economic expansion to increase employment in regions where a labor surplus existed. The other was to bring about rope from surplus areas to centers where it was vitally needed, regardless of national boundaries.

He said the program was closely interwoven with West Europe's need to strengthen its defenses against possible Communist aggression. However, it has met with at least two major obstacles:

1. The impediments to economic expansion by Europe's rigid cartel system.

2. The obstruction to the free movement of labor forces and goods at national boundaries.

Restriction Encountered
Mr. Goldy said that economic expansion was restricted by the control that cartels and monopolies held over the development and allocation of raw materials.

"As a result, business is static," he added, "the rule is low output and high prices, low wages and high profits. The system is accompanied by under-employment and the flight of capital."

To illustrate his point he chose as an example his favorite subject — lumber.

"I was amazed to find that in Switzerland and Germany wooden carts and oxen are still used to logging trucks."

"Since labor is so cheap the work is done largely by hand and there is little incentive to install machinery which would increase production and lower prices."

Like many Americans, Mr. Goldy said he had thought of Europe as impoverished in natural resources.

"The fact is, I found that Europe is far from being poor," he continued, "however, many countries here have not fully developed or utilized their resources."

Barriers At Frontiers

He said it was questionable whether Europe's economic riches would ever be realized without economic and political federation. As for the flow of surplus labor to areas where it was needed for defense production, Mr. Goldy said

Junior Red Cross Fills School Chest For Needy

Students of Roseburg Junior High School have been sponsoring activities to finance a school chest for Korean or other foreign schools.

The Junior Red Cross chest will contain pencils, crayons, tablets, a soccer and smaller balls, a first aid kit, geography book, an atlas and a copy of the school annual. There will be enough supplies to furnish 48 students.

Money has been raised through candy and cookie sales. A five cent admission has also been charged to special volleyball games. Cost of filling the chest has been estimated at $150.

All articles going into the chest will be new. Junior Red Cross officers are Beverly Sims, chairman, and Daren Engle, secretary-treasurer.
