Three Men Die Following Fight Of Two Trappers

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP)—Three men are dead as a result of a dispute between two trappers in the Yukon River valley of Kookrine, 200 miles west of here. U. S. Marshal Frank Chapados said Friday.

Chapados said investigation by Deputy Marshal Francis X. Wirth disclosed one man was accidentally shot and killed and the other two men took their own lives after his death.

Chapados said Wirth reported the trouble started with a fist fight between two trappers who were mauling a dog team on the trail between Ruby and Kookrine.

Native Trapper Robert Bob received a bad beating at the hands of Trapper Nelson McQuestion, the marshal said.

The following day, he added, Bob took a rifle and started a search for McQuestion to "get even with him."

Just as Bob and McQuestion were about to clash a bystander stepped between them and attempted to break up the argument. Wirth reported. The bystander, identified as Fred Olin, was accidentally killed by a bullet from Bob's rifle.

Wirth said Bob, apparently in remorse, killed himself a short time later by slashing his throat.

When word of the two deaths reached Tanana, a few miles away, same privileges as those who go to college. Campus life is similar to college life.

The director of the school is Winston D. Purvine, former assistant in the Vocational Education Department. He has run it since it opened.

The school probably will be there for a long, long time. But it will be a bone of contention for a long time, too.

Wirth set out for Kookrine to investigate. The deputy marshal said when McQuestion heard of the officer's arrival in the village he shot himself in the lung with a rifle.

Chapados said the nature of the original quarrel and motive for the two suicides have not been determined. All three men were residents of the village, he said, and were well acquainted with each other.

The dispute started Wednesday of last week with the fist fight, McQuestion died Monday of last week but word of the tragedy was not received until Thursday.

State Technical Institute Continues To Operate Despite Opposition From Labor Federation, Some Legislators

By PAUL W. HARVEY JR.

SALEM (AP)—The State Federation of Labor, with the help of some economy-minded legislators and others who don't want tax money spent for vocational education, still wants to wreck Oregon Tech.

This controversial school, Oregon Technical Institute at Klamath Falls, was started five years ago when the state took over the Klamath Marine Barracks, used during the war to treat Marines with tropical diseases.

Despite the bitter attacks on it, the school has mushroomed to an enrollment of more than 800 students.

OTI has had hard sledding in each of the three most recent legislatures. But the influential Klamath County legislators always have managed to steer its appropriations through, led by Rep. Henry Semon, Klamath Falls, chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee.

"The main opposition comes from the State Federation of Labor (AFL). It claims that OTI men don't get good training, and that the AFL unions' apprenticeship program can train them much better."

Graduates Succeed, Claim

Supporters of the school, including the controlling State Board of Education, says the school's graduates have had outstanding success in their post-graduate jobs. OTI, the only school of its kind in the West, has graduated 763 persons, with another big class coming up in June.

Oscar Paulson, state director of vocational education, says that local unions aren't prejudiced against Oregon Tech graduates.

"Unions in various upstate towns accept the graduate as a member on the basis of the employer's wage scale paid. When entering a union shop, membership is immediate. Some start in non-union shops and affiliate voluntarily," Paulson says.

Courses at the school are: accounting, bookkeeping, general office practice, medical and dental assistant, retail business management, commercial art, engineering, wood, medical technology, office equipment, radio communications, water and sewage, plant technology, silk screen processing, sign painting, watch repair, auto body and fender, auto mechanics, auto painting, auto electric, auto machine, auto radiator, baking, cabinet making, carpentry, combination welding, diesel mechanics, dry cleaning, electrical repair, farm mechanics, gunsmithing, machine shop, refrigeration servicing, and sports equipment.

Expenses Not High

The institute has three terms a year. Classes take six hours a day and the tuition fees vary from only $63.50 to $90 per term. The courses run from one to three years.

There are low-cost dormitories for single students and for married students and their families. For instance, a family can get an apartment for $24 a month, with all utilities included.

Many students work their way through OTI with part-time work. OTI gets students from all over the nation. Last year the students came from all Oregon counties except Jefferson and Sherman.

Some people think it would be better if the school were closer to the state's population centers. Last year there were 126 students from Klamath County, and Marion was next with 33. Multnomah County was third with 31.

Some legislators are disgusted with the amount of money it takes to run the 922-acre campus.

In Red First Two Years

The 1947 Legislature appropriated $620,000 to run OTI for two years, with the vocational education department promising the school quickly would become self-supporting. The Emergency Board had to supplement that with a $75,000 grant, and even then, the school ran $222,000 in the red for its first two years.

In 1949, the Legislature appropriated $948,240, and the 1951 Legislature gave the school $1,403,000. That's a long way from being self-supporting.

Paulson's answer is that despite the cost of the expensive machinery needed in OTI courses, the cost per OTI student per year is $834, compared with an average cost of $688 per student in the state university and colleges.

OTI has had strong support from veterans organizations. In 1947, 98

BUSINESS AS USUAL—daylight versus standard time. The problem of keeping the coast-to-coast programs on the air and in their respective slots, despite the multitude of time differences, is a Herculean chore. The solution that the Don Lee Net decided upon was to send one of their top KHJ engineers, Eddie De La Pina to station KPJO, Klamath Falls, Oregon, to install three network-type tape recorders to handle the delayed broadcasts to areas remaining on standard time, and thereby maintaining an uninterrupted program schedule. Two of the huge recorders were to be flown to Klamath and a third to follow by truck. However, when they got to the airport, the recorders were bigger than the doors of the plane. So they waited for a larger plane, with larger doors. When they finally arrived in Medford, the nearest point the huge plane could land, they had to be shifted to a truck and hauled the remaining distance along a bumpy, winding mountain road. Needless to say, De La Pina literally hovered over them like a hen with a brood of chicks. Things seem to be running as smoothly as can be expected, as we write this, the second day of the time change.
