Decision On Constitutional Limits On Eggs In Oregon May Be Sidestepped By High Court In Steel Seizure Case

By JAMES MARLOW. WASHINGTON — (AP) — In the steel dispute which was argued Monday the Supreme Court can do several things without deciding flatly on the basic question before it: The constitutional limits on a President.

Usually the court doesn't hand down a single, flat opinion on broad constitutional questions. Instead, it decides specific issues which may be a part of a broad problem without running headon into the problem itself.

For example, this court has handled case after case involving the wide question of segregation of Negroes. It has never ruled on whether segregation as a whole is good, bad, constitutional or unconstitutional.

It has ruled on specific examples of segregation brought before it. It has said Negroes must not be forced to ride in the rear of buses crossing state lines.

And it has said that Negroes now are admitted to white graduate schools in the South without saying Negroes had to be admitted to white high and grammar schools. When it got a case involving graduate schools, it limited its ruling to graduate schools.

What Court Can Do. And, without giving an opinion of any kind, the court can send the steel dispute back to the U.S. Court of Appeals or even to District Judge David Pine for more arguments or findings. It was Pine who said the President exceeded his power in seizing the mills and ordered them given back.

If it wants to give an opinion, the court could do so quickly. Perhaps in days. Maybe in weeks. Or it could delay its opinion if it was long delayed a steel settlement might then make an opinion unnecessary.

The problem that goes to the court as the heart of the steel dispute is this: Does the President have special built-in but invisible powers giving him authority to seize private property when he says he is acting for the general welfare in an emergency?

Court-Martial Of Rich Seaman Alleges Malice

PEARL HARBOR — A Navy prosecutor told a court-martial that wealthy seaman Bruce S. Hopping tried to get "fleet regulations changed to fit his case."

The peacetime lumber executive from Port Newark, N. J., is charged with conspiring to complain against Navy discipline and with trying to publicly discredit his superior officers.

The trial is an outgrowth of the manner in which Hopping has complained about the Navy system which he says is shot through with "brass-bound inequality."

Cmdr. Richard J. Sieman of Blakesburg, Ia., the prosecutor, told the court Hopping used fellow crewmen on the U. S. S. Reclaimer in an effort to discredit his commanding officer, Lt. Marion C. Kilpatrick of Watervliet, N. Y.

Kilpatrick testified Hopping joined the salvage ship on Dec. 31, 1951. "After she had been changed from a relic of World War II into a first class ship of the fleet, after she had performed every job she was called to do in the Korean war... and less than a month before she headed home."

Kilpatrick said Hopping asked for shore duty after he had been aboard six weeks.

The officer said that was not enough sea duty to qualify Hopping for a transfer so his request was turned down.
