Yoncalla Water System Controversy Renewed

By MRS. GEORGE EDES
The old controversy regarding the Yoncalla water system is again in evidence throughout the town. Petitions are being circulated, asking the city to put new pipes with new ones, and conserving old leaky pipes in town. Every summer the water scarcity is in evidence, and lots of water is wasted in leaks. By taking care of the leaks, and replacing old pipes with new ones, and conserving the water now wasted in the reservoir the water situation will be greatly improved.

Comstock Cemetery Clean Up Day Sunday

By LORETTA OLESON
May 25 has been chosen as the day to gather at Comstock Cemetery to clean up and care for the graves. Everyone must bring his own tools. This is such a beautiful spot, and the community has fenced it and tries to keep the road to it travelled and the grounds cleaned up.
If those who are unable to come themselves will send a contribution to the Secretary of the Association, Mrs. Grace Goins, Box 26, Curtin, or leave the money with the Curtin postmaster. It will be used to the best advantage. It is difficult to hire anyone this time of year to work in the cemetery, as everyone is so busy.

Several who have graves in this cemetery would like to have a meeting and try to raise money to mark the older graves while persons are still here who remember whose they are. There is a grave of a veteran of the Cherokee Indian War. And a fenced enclosure, badly grown up to trees and weeds, the fence being a remarkable example of beautiful hand carving.

The Lions not only sponsor the party, but provide rain coats and helmets as well. Stan Gottschalk is the Lions' chairman in charge. Sgt. Vernon Murdoch of the city police directs the patrol.

Roseburg Artist Notes New Gains In Art Activities

Art clubs in Oregon have expanded and greatly advanced both in numbers and services the past few years. This was the statement of Mrs. Jack West, who, with Mrs. Kenneth Ford, reported on the first annual meeting of the Oregon Art Alliance held at the Portland Art Museum, May 3. They spoke at the Roseburg Art Association's monthly meeting at Senior High School Tuesday night.

Roseburg is one of 31 Oregon communities to have an art club, Mrs. West reports. Coquille's club with 75 members, has held 16 exhibits in less than two years of organization, is holding youth art classes, and is starting an art center, she said. Other outstanding clubs included those at Eugene, with 250 members, Astoria, Coos Bay and Klamath Falls. At the latter club, art teachers are brought in to teach for a month each. Many clubs are reported to have workshops. Next to the Portland Art Museum, formed 60 years ago at DeLake the most famous art group in Oregon is the Lincoln County club, formed 11 years ago with $25 and an old building. It sponsors traveling exhibits which may be viewed daily by the public, she reported.

Future Aim Cited

The aim of the Roseburg art group, according to President Leonard Kimbrell, is to work toward a permanent place to work and to exhibit. At present the group meets in the high school on the third Tuesday of the month.

Featured speaker of the evening was Howard Glaser, Eugene architect, who emphasized the importance of functional design, use of native materials and production in works of architecture. He cited the igloo as an ideal, a truly modern, piece of architecture. Professional architects are only beginning to make use of the structural and insulation advantages of this design, he said.
He also showed slides to illustrate his discussion before 14 Art Association members and 36 guests. He explained how furniture design can degenerate from a functionally useful item to a commercial imitation that may look similar to the designer's ideal, but lacks true comfort and functional usefulness.

Paintings of club members were displayed, along with examples of students' art work at the Senior High. Some fine quality dishware and silverware were also exhibited.

Mrs. Ford, in summing up the importance of art to our age, quoted Thomas C. Colt Jr., in saying that art represents "the sensibility of man in a mechanized society."
