

Stevenson Far Outran Both Truman, Douglas In Being Elected Illinois Governor

By ROGER F. LANE

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP)—The striking fact about Adlai Stevenson's election as governor in 1948 was that he polled 539,000 more Illinois votes than President Truman.

The President carried the state by only 33,612 of 4,075,000 votes cast.

Stevenson outdistanced popular Paul H. Douglas, an easy Senate winner, by 165,000 votes.

Little less astonishing were two other aspects of the landslide victory: That such success crowned his maiden political campaign and that the office he sought was his second choice.

Stevenson had an eye on a U. S. Senate seat when his name was proposed by a small group of ardent admirers to Jacob M. Arvey and other Chicago Democratic leaders.

But Arvey already was sold on Za man for that spot—Douglas, then a University of Chicago economics professor.

Stevenson thought his experience in the State Department and with the U. N. better fitted him for the Senate.

Nevertheless, he was persuaded to run for governor against Dwight H. Green, Republican incumbent seeking a third term.

"If it's true that politics is the art of compromise," he once said, "I've had a good start. My mother was a Republican and a Unitarian. My father was a Democrat and Presbyterian. I ended up in his party and her church."

He campaigned fiercely against Green, denouncing what he called his "scandalous and thirteenth-century administration, broken promises and cynical sale of privilege."

After the election, he remarked that he would have no say in shaping federal policies—"but I can improve the probity, the efficiency and morality of state government, or break my heart and my head in the attempt."

An early move toward this objective was to tighten law enforcement by legislation taking the state police out of the political patronage realm and putting them under a merit system.

The state police bill provided for letting 250 cops on the solidly Republican, 300-man force hold their jobs.

Tradition called for sweeping all out to make room for faithful of his own party.

This was hard to stomach for legislators who owed their seats to the efficiency of the Chicago Democratic machine. Said one, "this governor must have been born in a political fairytale."

However, the disgruntled lawmakers conceded that the governor was "courageous," and he voted for the bill, along with a majority of colleagues.

Highway Program Begun

Stevenson put over on the second try a one hundred million dollar a year program for rebuilding the state highway system. It is just now hitting its stride.

To make headway on roads, and in virtually every other field, the Democratic governor needed support of Republicans who controlled both legislative branches in 1949 and the Senate in 1951. He got it surprisingly often.

Stevenson wanted a rewrite job on the state's 1870 constitution, last amended in 1908. He called it "our ancient straitjacket."

His drive failed, but produced a GOP counteroffensive he joined to liberalize the amending process and pave the way for substantive change.

School Funds Upped

Under the governor's leadership, state appropriations for elementary and high schools were nearly doubled.

Understaffed, overcrowded state mental hospitals got more help and an expansion program.

The state quickened the battle against tuberculosis, and for utility regulation.

The state government structure was streamlined. Its workers got raises.

The governor called for fair employment practices legislation, a perennial loser in Illinois. Twice the legislature turned him down.

Other troubles came along, and critics pointed to three happenings which they claimed were the result of fumbling administrative direction by Stevenson.

One was the coal mine explosion Dec. 23, 1951 at West Frankfort, Ill., which killed 119 men. Federal inspectors said it could have been prevented by strict enforcement of state mine safety laws.

Meat Inspectors Fired

A second was widespread sale of horsemeat disguised as beef. An estimated 20 million pounds of oysters were passed off on the public by illicit dealers who reaped large profits.

The scandal was brought to light by federal officials. Stevenson investigated and fired more than a dozen state food inspectors, along with their chief who admitted accepting bribes to cover up.

Stevenson posted a record for Illinois chief executives by vetoing 134 bills sent to him by the 1951 Legislature.

"Christ Leads The Way"

Which Way?

A little girl had been pleading with her father to come to church with her. Somewhat irritated, after fifteen minutes of family argument, the father snorted: "You and your mother can go your way, and I will go mine!"

"But, Daddy," said the little one, "which way are you going?" This was a question he hadn't figured on—and he didn't know the answer.

"I am the WAY," says Jesus, "no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." If you have not found Christ to be your way to happiness on earth and eternal joy in heaven, you are still on the wrong way.

In Christ there is pardon, peace, and power to lead the better life. Outside of Christ there is no assurance, no hope, no heaven. He is the only Way. Which way are you going?
