DECISION FOR VOTERS

By Charles V. Stanton

Administration forces and Stevenson supporters are harping loudly about General Eisenhower's failure to repudiate Senators McCarthy and Jenner. They are endeavoring to capitalize upon the Communist-inspired propaganda directed at the two Senators who have been so zealous although somewhat unethical, in cleaning the Reds out of government.

The Socialist-Democrats insist that McCarthy and Jenner should be repudiated by Ike; that the general should disassociate himself from them; that he should ride them out of the Republican party.

Let's examine the situation briefly, for it contains political ideologies bearing upon the future of our government.

It has been the practice of Socialist-Democrats throughout their so-called New Deal and Fair Deal administrations to purge, wherever possible, all non-conformists. They have tried to rid their party of political stalwarts who resisted encroachment from the Socialist wing in the Democratic party. Men such as Senator Byrd of Virginia, a true Democrat, have been continuing targets of the administration's hatchet crews.

Party Rule Exploited

The Socialist-Democrat theory is one of centralized government. It limits state's rights. It endeavored, through a rubber-stamp Congress and a packed Supreme Court, to circumvent the check and balance plan of the Constitution and to gather all governmental powers into the hands of the executive department. Thus dissenters, even though party members, must be eliminated if the theory is to be effectively operated.

This political theory gained prominence with the New Deal, was carried into the Truman administration, and is advocated by the current candidate.

Criticism directed against Eisenhower is based on the premise that the same theory should prevail in the Republican party; that the Republicans should rid their party of all who do not follow the party line or who may have engaged in acts or activities contrary to ethical standards.

Ike Believes in State's Rights

Now let's look at the other side. The two senators against whom the Communists and Socialist-Democrats pour out their venom were elected by the people of their respective states. As senators they are in the legislative branch of government, not the executive branch. Eisenhower has declared himself as advocating sovereignty of the States composing The Union. If, therefore, he were to repudiate the two senators he not only would be invading the sovereignty of states, but would be transgressing the sharply defined boundary between the executive and legislative departments of government as established by the Constitution.

Thus there is clearly outlined for the voters two philosophies of government at conflict in the current campaign. The Socialist-Democrat party, led by Stevenson, is advocating continuance of centralized government and party dictatorship through weakening of constitutional checks and balances and the purging of party dissenters.

Eisenhower, on the other hand, has demonstrated his respect for the constitutional system and so declines to trespass upon state's rights or to invade the legislative branch of government, where Congress has the right of determination of eligibility of its members.

No facet of the current campaign, we believe, more clearly demonstrates the two philosophies of government than the argument involving the two senators. Criticism voiced by Stevenson's supporters conclusively evidences willingness to transgress constitutional conduct. Eisenhower, by failure to repudiate, while giving no endorsement other than joint appearance, recognizes supremacy of the American voter and accepts constitutional rules.

The voter must decide which type of government, as exemplified by the two candidates, he desires in the next administration.

Scraps From the MENDING BASKET by Vidnett Martin P.O. Box 574, Drain, Or.

Why don't we have periscopes over here the way the British crowds do? I don't know when I've been so disappointed as I was, after driving over 40 miles to SEE the General and Mrs. Eisenhower, not to have so much as a glimpse of either of them. Hundreds didn't! We guessed wrong where the train-end would come to a halt. Even the sound truck failed to function at the beginning. My, there was a crowd at Eugene!

Why in the world wasn't there some kind of a makeshift platform that would have enabled the General and all the crowd to SEE each other? If he came out on the platform at Klamath Falls in his bathrobe, as did his wife, wouldn't he have been delighted to step up on some higher elevation for a minute or two so he could be SEEN by folk who had come there for that purpose? We could hear him at home on the radio!

It was my fate to become wedged in the crowd behind a man who had stepped right out of one of those clothing advertisements: you know, wide, wide shoulders and a height to match. He had binoculars on a strap around his neck, and used them constantly, although why HE needed them I don't know. I thought of asking him if he would turn sideways, but even that wouldn't have helped much. The crowd was so dense, and we were so far back! One man did lift his wife up so she could "see Mamie." Well, I'm no featherweight nowadays so EJ didn't offer to do that for me. (But there was a time when he carried me half a block to the corner drugstore in a city street because I had remarked I did wish I could go as far as that drugstore, and have an ice-cream soda there! I had been ill a long time. Whatever the neighbors thought I don't know. Wouldn't he have bothered EJ anyhow.)

So long as a candidate endures that whistle-stop grind in order to SEE and be SEEN, I don't see why the cities, where the train is going to stop long enough for a speech, don't rig up some kind of a temporary platform that can be shoved close to the train when it has stopped.

Well, my disappointment was mitigated a trifle today when I opened the Satevepost (the one with Ike's picture on the cover) and found that charming portrait of Mrs. Eisenhower in colors inside, and an interesting article by the artist who painted both the General and his wife. "Mamie" looks just the way I imagined she would!

SAN FRANCISCO — California Republicans are in a mood to crack down on Governor Earl Warren, whose personal feuding with Senator Richard Nixon has Democrats from coast to coast grinning with delight.

Warren still blames the GOP vice presidential nominee for ruining what he thought were his own excellent chances for the presidential nomination. This is Warren's personal pipe dream and it is far removed from the political realities that existed in Chicago at convention time.

The governor's peeve, however, is hurting GOP chances in California, but this seems to be the least of Warren's worries. In fact, the governor delighted California Democrats recently by trotting out to climb aboard President Truman's campaign train when it came into the state. For his consideration he got a pat on the back from Truman along with every Republican sympathizer over the way Nixon is supposed to have cheated him out of the presidency. The kind words from Truman delighted the governor but left almost every other GOP politician in the state gagging with disgust.

Don't Want Endorsement
 Many Democrats running for office shudder at the thought of an endorsement from Truman. They consider such an event a short cut to political suicide. But not the Republican governor of the State of California. He not only liked what he heard, but had no criticism to offer when the president was cussing his way across the state, spouting falsehoods a very railroad crossing.

In climbing aboard the presidential train, Warren probably figured he was joining distinguished political company. He is the third GOP politician awarded the President's political medal of merit. The other two are Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon and Senator William Langer of North Dakota. Both label themselves Republicans but there is no sensible reason for their doing so. Just as Warren does, the two senators enjoy having their pictures taken with Mr. Truman—just like any ward heeling Democrat.

Prior to the Truman train incident most California Republicans felt the governor could be of help to the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket. Now they lay their political plans without considering him. And the fact that they do so jarred the governor to the point where he announced he would make a few speeches in the closing days of the campaign. Republicans are not jubilant, however, in anticipation of what they expect to hear.

Wants To Go To Capital
 Warren still wants to go to Washington. He thinks now that if Eisenhower and Nixon are elected he can persuade party politicians in the state to endorse him for appointment to replace Nixon in the Senate.

To do so Warren would have to resign with a firm commitment from Goodwin Knight, the lieutenant governor, to name him for Nixon's Senate seat. Knight is a party regular who may have other ideas. He has considerable political standing and Republicans are convinced he could be elected governor against anybody the Democrats might put up in opposition.

Warren's other hope, of course, is for an appointment in a GOP president's cabinet. But he seems to think he can work his way to Washington by throwing political tantrums in California. West Coast Republicans express an opposite view. They have learned in their political schooling that the road to success is paved with political favors. Since Warren's isn't doing any for the party at the moment there is a strong conviction here that nobody will owe him anything if elected.

What if the Eisenhower-Nixon ticket is elected in politics are not acquired by a system of divine right.

Billy Rose Told To List Income
 NEW YORK (AP)—A State Supreme Court justice has told showman Billy Rose to concede his ability to pay unlimited alimony to his estranged wife, Eleanor Holm, or else reveal certain data about his finances since 1939.

The ruling by Justice James B. McNally Friday was a vital point in the former Olympic swimming star's efforts to get a peek at the financial background of her husband.

McNally said Rose must disclose his income, earnings and assets. Rose, who has kept his wealth secret, reportedly has amassed millions in the 13 years since he married Miss Holm.

They were recently separated, but alimony has yet to be set. Examination of Rose's records was scheduled for next Wednesday. An alimony hearing set for the same day was postponed.

McNally said that if Rose concedes ability to pay the court will examine the standard of living of the two in setting alimony. Miss Holm now gets $700 a week temporary alimony.

 TACOMA (AP)—The Pacific Northwest will have an electric power brownout next month if dry weather continues, but the average consumer will not be affected.

C. A. Erdahl, chairman of the Pacific Northwest Utilities Conference Committee, said Thursday this is the word from the Defense Electric Power Administration.

Erdahl said the DEPA advised the committee a curtailment order would affect only industries which use more than 5,000 kilowatt hours per week. About 1,000 plants fall in this group, he said.

Erdahl said any curtailment will be announced two weeks in advance. Meanwhile, a voluntary conservation program is contemplated.

Farm Bureau Opposes Proposal Of Holy Bill

YONCALLA—The school district reorganization act commonly known as the Holy bill is one measure on the ballot this November 4th which we of the Douglas county Farm Bureau urge every one to vote 321 NO.

The economies of centralized purchasing of equipment, the streamlined centralized administrative machinery set up to unify both educational processes and school districts are but two of the highly recommended virtues of this act which we of the Farm Bureau feel are dangerous to our future well being. One does not have to tax his imagination to picture what could happen to centralized buying. Every day seems to uncover some sort of graft in high places. Besides, it has been shown time after time that larger units of government spend more lavishly, are farther from the people and have less regard for the taxpayer or his dollars. The Holy report, from which this act is drawn, recommends additional specialized teachers, district nursing centers, district offices such as counselors, etc., all of which cost money. Under these circumstances, it is hard to see how the taxpayer will save money as proponents of this act suggest.

The most dangerous part of this entire act, we believe, is the appointive procedure whereby the state department of education appoints a commissioner of school district reorganization. It is true that there are disadvantages to filling managerial offices such as this one with personnel elected by the people but certainly the damage cannot be as great as to provide an opening, as this act does, for subversive elements to influence the educational processes of our children.

Also, may we point out that larger educational units do not necessarily provide better education. The winner in the 1952 Oregon Statesman-KSLM spelling contest was from a three-room school. Voluntary reorganization and consolidation is working in Oregon and should not be impaired by mandatory legislation of such a far reaching scale. Reorganization will require a large building program at a time when labor and materials are at an all-time high. Good, usable school buildings will be abandoned. Oregon schools rank among the highest in the forty eight states, therefore this drastic change is not needed.

In The Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

 of a good pilot he made his landing. As he stepped out of his wrecked plane, he grinned and said: "Oh, it wasn't TOO tough."

By way of contrast:
 Back here on the home front, politicians are stumping the country and telling the people to vote again for a corrupt and extravagant administration "because you NEVER HAD IT SO GOOD."

That brings to my mind a picture:
 A little while back I was coming from the airport to one of our larger Pacific Coast cities. In the bus seat ahead of me were two gentlemen of plump build and flashy appearance. They were obviously members of the quick buck tribe. The subject of their conversation was the nice fat profit they had made by buying low and selling high in these years when the inflationary spiral has kept prices going UP AND UP AND UP and never going down.

Said one of them to the other: "I never had it so good as I've had it in these years, and you can bet your bottom dollar I'm going to VOTE TO KEEP IT THAT WAY."

It recalls another incident.
 Back during the shooting war, two girls were talking in a crowded bus. One of them a lady welder at a shipbuilding plant. She was telling her companion what a swell job she had, the short hours and the big pay.

"Oh," she said in a burst of enthusiasm, "I never had it so good. I hope the war goes on forever."

She was just a dumb, green kid. She had no conception of the REASON why her job was so good. It never crossed her mind that the shipyards were roaring at top speed to replace the ships that were being sunk by enemy submarines.

The words "I hope the war goes on forever" meant nothing to her. They were just an empty phrase thrown into her chuckle-headed chatter. But they didn't sit well with those nearby who had sons and husbands and brothers and cousins in the war that was making the flirty-pated lady welder's job so good.

There came near being a scene in the bus.
 "That's war for you. In war (whether shooting war or cold war) some never had it so good and some have to die in agony. It always has been that way. It always will be that way."

Give (inevitably) to politics:
 Rev. Em-Hell Harry was giving 'em hell in Buffalo last night. He attacked what he termed "hot heads" who are wagging what he called a PHONY campaign against Democrats to win votes—despite the fact, he said, that such tactics could tear the nation apart.

Let me tell you about that, Harry.
 The comics don't take enough FORCE OF ARMS. They plant stooges—Quislings, we came to call them back in the last war. When these Quislings get strong enough (when, working like termites, they have eaten the good, sound wood away and nothing is left but a rotten shell) they TAKE OVER. We saw them do it over and over in Europe during and after the war. That is how they took over Czechoslovakia, among others.

Alger Hiss was one of these stooges. IF the scheme had worked... IF the good sound structure of our government and our manhood had been eaten away... IF enough traitors could have been planted in key places in Washington and elsewhere... IF America could have been weakened
