Surgeons Patch New-Born Baby

CHICAGO (AP) — Surgeons used the breastbone and parts of several ribs from a stillborn baby in an operation on a baby girl who was born with an open and incomplete chest.

The surgeons fashioned a new chest wall to cover the infant's heart which was beating outside her body when she was born Sept. 28. One-fourth of her chest was missing.

Dr. Saul A. Mackler of Michael Reese Hospital performed the operation on the child, Linda Wetzel, daughter of Werner Wetzel, 26, and Mrs. Rosemarie Wetzel, 28, on Oct. 8.

Dr. Mackler said the transplanted bone will not grow as Linda develops. But it will serve to provide a frame work for development of a chest to accommodate the heart and lungs. He said it will be a month, or possibly a year, before it can be determined whether the operation was a success.
