History, Social Econ Classes Study Ballot

Democracy in action was being taught to senior high school students through the recent "election" held there on the regular Nov. 4 ballot measures and candidates.

Senior social economics and junior history classes had carefully studied the men and measures for many weeks before the voting, reports Ralph Scudder, history department head. Students even made campaign speeches in their classrooms.

Freshmen and sophomores, who voted in their English classes, had no previous study on measures so voted only on the presidential and vice presidential candidates.

The Hi-Y Club at the school handled the voting for these two lower grades, while the history and social economics classes took care of the juniors and seniors.
