SPOT ADVICE

Don't Let Soil Destroy Garments

When you're an expert, you become so well-informed you wonder why in the world everybody else doesn't know what you know. Know what I mean? It's easy as apple pie for you to bake the best apple pie ever baked every time you bake one. And all Cole Porter has to do is sit down at the piano and tinkle-tinkle! Another hit sells another million copies...

Well, what I'm talking about is something every man, woman and child (including their relatives) should be familiar with, VIZ., Soil Destroys Garments.

It isn't smart or economical to let a garment get dirty and then hang it up, wear the cleaner one, and wait till they're all soiled before you take a few of them to the cleaners. No sir, you're just letting ol' man chemistry eat 'em up when you do that.

Same way with stains. You spill something on a garment and then you rub it in, hang it up in the closet, let it cake up and get set, and then wonder why color fades, the fabric wears, or the moths like your closet.

Yep! Best advice I can possibly give you is: CLEAN 'EM OFTEN. CLEAN 'EM SOON. And take 'em to a good cleaner when you do.
