Three Programs Over KRNR Of Unusual Interest

Three programs of unusual interest are slated over KRNR this weekend, according to Manager Leroy Hiatt. All are Columbia Broadcasting System releases.

Nita Mack's original radio dramatization of "Twas the Night Before Christmas" will be presented for the 14th season in a new version, which includes Rudolph, the Red-Nosed Reindeer on the KRNR-CBS "Let's Pretend" program, which will be playing every Saturday at 3:30 p.m.

Each year, Miss Mack modernizes the types of toys being manufactured in Santa's North Pole workrooms to include the currently popular and new gifts for youngsters.

Saturday at 7 p.m. will also begin a new program, "Grand Central Station," radio's dramatic showcase for Broadway actors and actresses, presenting its 13th annual performance of the program's Yuletide classic "Miracle for Christmas."

Mason Adams, who rose to radio fame as a result of his broadcast eight years ago in the leading role, will again star, supported by an all-Broadway cast.

The "Amos 'n' Andy" show at 4:30 Sunday, for the 13th consecutive year, will repeat the Christmas program that has become one of radio's classics—Amos' interpretation of the Lord's Prayer for his daughter Arabella.

5,000 POUNDS OF CHEESE, all in one chunk, were delivered to the City Drive-In Market this week from Green Bay Wis. The Cheese, which actually weighs in at slightly over 5,000 lbs., took 96 man-hours to make and the milking from over 2,000 cows. Posing with it are, left, Henry Crowdis and Bill Boyer. A window had to be removed from the market to get it inside, and a lift truck was used to unload it from the freight truck. The cheese was ordered a year in advance to allow for aging. This is the second time the market has ordered a huge cheese for Christmas sales. (Mindalovich Photo.)

Hope Held Out For Siamese Twins' Recovery

CHICAGO — Two words spoken by Rodney Dee Brodie, one of the separated Siamese twins, gave a slight lift Saturday to hopes that he will recover.

Both Rodney and his brother, Roger, are on the critical list. But Rodney, the stronger of the two, showed signs of improvement.

Rodney is starting to respond when his nurses speak to him. The chief nurse showed him a pencil and asked "What's this?"

The 15-month-old lad repeated the words.

But surgeons warned he has not yet passed his "first hurdle." Roger remains in a "very precarious" condition.

Roger remains in a "very pre-thurday, a day after a team of surgeons separated him from his twin. He smiled and cried.

He began to take nourishment — water and milk from a bottle — Friday.

The brains of the boys — Roger and Rodney — have a three-ply protective covering — a coating of a plastic substance, a layer of aluminum foil and gauze bandages that are wrapped about the heads in turban fashion.

Surgeons are greatly concerned about the possibility of cerebral edema or cerebral anoxemia.

Polio Epidemic Was Worst In History

transport the patients when they couldn't be handled locally.

He said the patients were in Portland from Pendleton within an hour, and that it took about 150 volunteer workers to accomplish the feat.

Malecki had a word of praise for the Douglas County work in gathering contributions for the March of Dimes fund.

"If you did not have the successful campaign that you had last year," he said, "and I believe Bob Bashford will agree with me, you would have had to ask the National Foundation for help."

The future of the foundation, Malecki said, hinges on two things — the advancement of research in treating and preventing polio, and the drive to secure finances to carry on the research as well as treat patients.

He said that in 1951, 74 percent of the money contributed by the public toward the March of Dimes was spent by local chapters, because the National Foundation sent some of its half back to the local chapters.

He said the "situation is going to be somewhat more serious" because the National Foundation is now seven million dollars in debt. "Last year we were five million dollars in debt."

Research in preventing and treating polio is continuing, however, and a new short-term preventative drug is apparently having good results in tests in epidemic regions.

YOUR BODY

ROSEBURG, OREGON — These health articles are written and paid for by Dr. B. A. SMITH Chiropractic Physician, 1500 Garden Valley Road, in the interest of public health and to help you understand the body function. Look for these informative articles every Saturday.

Hair, like other living things, is formed of cells. It receives blood, and therefore nourishment through the skin. Like the rest of the body, hair grows to maturity, then to old age, and dies.

When any single hair has attained its natural limit of growth, and fallen out, it is replaced by a young, new hair. On the scalp the natural life-expectancy of a hair has been variously estimated at eighteen months, to four or more years. (The life of an eyelash, incidentally, is about three months.) Various diseases bring about profuse loss of hair. When a hair has fallen out, the new one that replaces it normally is observable on the scalp in approximately six to ten weeks.

Hair is a modification of the growth of the upper skin. Hair owes its color to the different proportions of the chemicals which form its pigment. This accounts for the different shades of color which the use of some hair dyes often causes.

Living tissue, whether it is that of the skin, eye, nose or throat, is easily injured. Hair is no exception, and the effects are evident in various diseases. The greatest injury is suffered by the hair of the scalp. It is also a vast storage space for bacteria of all degrees.

Certain foods appear to influence the health of the hair. Experiments with animals prove that a loss of fur occurs when they are given a diet poor in protein, quantitatively and qualitatively, also to certain vitamin deficiencies. Vitamin A, to a certain extent, determines the quality of hair texture and its degree of fragility.

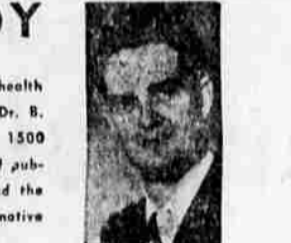

Some blood disorders are responsible for the poor quality of hair, just as improper or inadequate nourishment are responsible for unhealthy bodies. Many examples of dry, lustreless hair, for example, are caused by anemia. The condition of the hair is therefore largely a matter of physical health.

In most cases of baldness the condition is inevitable, and follows a pattern set by heredity. However, baldness may be the result of other causes—burns, for example, erysipelas, emotional shock, glandular disturbances, etc. It may be patchy or widespread. The condition is sometimes due to over active oil glands which possibly is due to infection and consists of an inflammation of the skin, with a great increase of dandruff.

Hair is composed of a nitrogenous substance—keratin. Keratin is soluble in alkalis. It is this property which exposes it to destruction from the chemical action of many minerals that there may be in soaps, dyes and bleaches or highly alkaline preparations.

Gray hair, while usually hereditary, sometimes is a symptom of a special condition. It occurs in disturbances of the endocrine glands, thyroid diseases, or Addison's disease. It is best to do nothing about gray hair. Moreover, the use of metallic hair dyes is risky. Aniline hair dyes are best avoided because they contain irritating coal-tar products. Vegetable dyes, such as henna, may be used safely.

Loss of hair in men is much more frequent than in women. It is relatively so rare in women that it presents little concern. Adv.

plane to go down about two miles off the base runway. Officials said, however, weather conditions were not a major factor.

The Air Force in Washington, D.C., reported the Globemaster belonged to the 62nd wing of the Tactical Air Command and was based at Larson, which is in the plateau country of Washington State's "Inland Empire" about four miles from Moses Lake.

The crash was the second by a Globemaster in six weeks, and the 10th in a series of tragic military plane disasters around the North Pacific rim since Nov. 7. The nine previous crashes took 211 lives.

Major Wassum said the Globemaster was making the hop to Texas as a "routine training flight," with service men taking advantage of the trip to get home for the holidays.

The C-124, big as a five-room house and capable of carrying as many as 200 combat troops, crashed only moments after the takeoff. Gasoline spilled from broken wing tanks and flames shot up.

Firefighting and rescue crews raced to the scene but were unable to save those trapped in the wreckage. The injured were rushed to hospitals at the Air Base and nearby Moses Lake.
