FOOT FACTS

THE COMMON CORN

In 1774, Dr. Low, London, England, wrote about corns and described what he thought were roots. Today, we know that corns do not have ROOTS and do not GROW. Corns are merely symptoms which indicate that an area is being irritated.

WHAT IS A CORN?

A corn is a collection of hard, dry, dead cells piled one upon the other. Some assume the shape of a small cone or inverted pyramid with the point pressing into the sensitive underlying tissue.

HOW DO CORNS FORM?

Corns form similarly as the stalactites in a cave. Both build up gradually over a period of time. From pressure and friction only the skin becomes irritated and gradually thickens as nature attempts to protect the area. This cycle of pressure, friction and ultimate thickening of the skin can progress to agonizing proportions. Indirectly, the cause (pressure and friction) can be due to improper footwear, foot im-balance, hammer or distorted toes, bony growths, etc.

WHY CORNS CAUSE PAIN

The irritation from a corn may vary from a minor discomfort to an excruciating pain. This is due to pressure on the sensitive nerves, directly beneath the hard mass. Since corns have no nerve supply they are not in themselves painful.

WHY CORNS DO NOT HAVE ROOTS

In nature, roots have a twofold purpose, anchoring and nourishing. Since corns are composed of layers of dead cells they obviously possess neither roots nor nerves.

TYPES OF CORNS

The most common is the hard corn usually found on the top or tip of the toes. Others are the soft corn between the toes, where perspiration macerates the area, and seed corns found on the sole of the foot. These, and others not so common, can be further complicated by extreme inflammation, infection, bursal formation beneath the mass, or a sinus sometimes penetrating to the bone itself.

WHAT NOT TO DO ABOUT CORNS

Stop cutting your corns for those of a friend. Daily, the chiropodist sees the disabling results of "barroom surgery", with the resulting infection that sometimes endangers the life of the victim. Do not be misled into applying so-called "corn-cures". Many of these ointments, liquids and pads contain powerful acids which can chemically burn the skin. Extreme pain and possible infection often result.

WHAT TO DO ABOUT CORNS

Visit a chiropodist, foot specialist. With modern, scientific treatment he will furnish immediate relief and a careful diagnosis discover the cause of the trouble. Your chiropodist is qualified to suggest measures to correct this condition.
