

Economist Warns Against 'Prophets Of Doom'

uncertainty was high prices rather than incomes. Reflecting the 'wait and see' attitude of the average consumer, he said the report showed investments would be shifted from 'risk type' to 'security-type' in 1954. Wood saw little change in the price index which now stands at 114.8 based on 100 percent for the years 1947-1949. He said prices were slipping down from the 1953 high of 115.4 through decreases in food, apparel, transportation, reading and recreation prices. But he predicted some prices would remain high or increase during the year. He named rent, medical care, personal care and other goods and services. He noted that people are more 'price-tag' conscious, so more 'sales' will be noted. But he said this attempt to lure the 'price-tag' customer may cut down on quality. Having painted the picture, Wood had this advice: He said the women should plan their buying wisely. He called dollars 'votes' by pointing out that prices go high when many 'vote' dollars are used for items, e.g., meat. Refraining from 'voting' cuts prices down. He urged that credit not be over-extended. He stated that services should be scrutinized closely because of their cost. He said they should worry about the cost of 'high living' rather than the high cost of living. He pointed out that careful spending will pay dividends. Goods and services will be abundant this year to set the stage for many 'good buys.' He said money can be saved by studying the 'pros and cons' of purchases. Also, he said, find out why prices are marked down before buying. Finally, he emphasized that 'America is not going to pot.' He said changes in the business are as normal as changes in the climate. 'We still have a bright future,' he concluded.

Welch demanded McCarthy be called to the witness chair as soon as Secretary Stevens finishes his testimony. Mundt told Welch the committee would determine the order of the proceedings. 2. George Anastos and Mrs. Frances Mims, staff employees of McCarthy, both swore they knew nothing about the 'cropping' of the photograph. There was some conflict, however, between their accounts of how the photograph was handled at the staff offices. Schine was excused from the witness chair but is to come back later for more general testimony.

Chamber Speaker Stresses Grassroots' Movement

of the U. S. Chamber. 'National affairs are personal affairs,' he snapped. 'Government has become a Frankenstein monster,' he said. He reasoned the only way to cut the 'monster' down to size was to bring government back closer to the local level where it is 'more efficient and less costly.' He pointed out the obvious fact that action in Washington, D. C., powerfully affects local businesses and persons, so they should have some reversing effect in helping plan the shots in Washington. Planning of the U. S. Chamber's new program covers 10 broad fields of national affairs. TAXES AND SPENDING — The movement would support the present administration program of cutting taxes, but balancing the budget. Lintz said he would be surprised to see taxes cut by $7.5 billion and budget balanced by the end of the 83rd Congress. He related that taxes cut would allow more money for capital investment which would create more jobs, particularly in the Northwest. WORLD TRADE — The Chamber will support increase of two-way trade by lowering tariff barriers on a selected basis. He reasoned this would bring better trade feelings from other countries to the U. S. instead of the Communist strong holds. And it would also cut down on the tide of spending which has pushed out $40 billion to 90 countries. AGRICULTURE — The Chamber would support Eisenhower's 'flexible parity supports' ranging from 75 to 90 per cent instead of the present 90 per cent. He said this would cut the present $8 1/2 billion in surpluses which are stored by the government. LABOR-MANAGEMENT LAW — The Chamber would support the Taft-Hartley law as good 'by and large,' but would call for such revisions as discard of the secondary boycott and clarification of states' rights in labor disputes. SOCIAL SECURITY — The Chamber will push for universal social security (to cover an estimated 12 to 15 million more people), including those now retired. Reasoning is this would cut down on the steadily rising cost of old age assistance. It will also support a pay-as-you-go system rather than the present reserve fund, which Lintz said was being spent for other government functions than the one for which it is earmarked. Under this system, the rate of social security payments would be set yearly to keep it stable. HIGHWAYS — The Chamber would support expanded federal spending for highways, particularly interstate routes. But it would not support complete return of federal gas tax funds to the highway program because, it is reasoned, the tax would become permanent. It presently is not earmarked for highways, but only as an added revenue. HOUSING — The Chamber would support flexible interest rates, but not extended times for amortization of low-cost houses. POSTAL SERVICE — The Chamber would support increasing rates of second and third class mail to aid the postal service in supporting itself. (It is currently operating on a million-dollar-a-day deficit.) TREATY LAW — The Chamber would support the spirit of the Breckinridge Amendment. BETTER GOVERNMENT — The Chamber supports the studies of the Hoover Commission and the Federal-State Commission, both of which are delving into the needs of 'decentralizing' government.

Budget Committee Sets $170,208 For City Vote

ing the total amount for that purpose to $20,000. Lighting at four railroad crossings at Mosher, Lane, Oak and Washington streets will be installed at a cost of about $5,000, with Southern Pacific to contribute a like amount. Loosley said more street and sewer improvements are anticipated next year, but because all work is done on an individual project basis, the Engineering Dept. budget has been increased only by $4,000, the cost of hiring one additional employee. Other works planned by the city during the next fiscal year include: Installation of street lights and signs in West Roseburg, plus the better police and fire protection. A street paving program which will allow widening of five blocks downtown. This, said the city engineer, will enable the streets to carry traffic better and to increase parking facilities. The streets to be widened haven't been designated. A $29,000 item in the street and bridges fund is part of the proposed budget. Most of the money will go toward repair of Fowler Street and the bridge over Deer Creek and Second Ave. South. A new department, for sanitary and sewer maintenance, has been set up in conjunction with the Street Dept. Loosley, said it is planned for better control over where cash is spent. This year's budget totaled $418,817, with $118,135 90 approved by the voters last spring to be assessed beyond the 6 per cent limitation. Actual tax levy on the new budget, though, will be increased by only $53,149. The city, explained Loosley, is receiving more income next year through more gasoline and liquor refunds from the state, franchises and licenses. Amount raised by taxes in this year's budget came to $224,747. The total tax levy by the city this year came to 20.9 mills, and Loosley expects an increase next year to 21.5 mills. He pointed out, though, that this year's millage rate would have been about 23 mills had the West Roseburg area been included on the current budget. A public hearing on the budget will be held June 3, provided the 13 vote tax excess is allowed in the May held three meetings with Molotov, taking up the question of composition of the conference for the Indo-Chinese discussion and urging that the Russians help promote a truce that would permit removal of French Union wounded from besieged Dien Bien Phu. It was learned Friday Molotov had proposed to Bidault that India be included in the conference. But French and Indian circles expressed belief the Russians would not make an issue of India's inclusion. The United States opposes representation of Prime Minister Nehru's government at the council table. An American argument is that the talks should be restricted for efficiency.

County 4-Her's Marketing Day Scheduled Friday

About 270 Douglas County 4-H Marketing Club members were in Roseburg Friday for the annual 4-H Marketing Day, sponsored by the Roseburg Chamber of Commerce. During the morning and afternoon, the 4-Hers were split into 16 groups to tour 23 Roseburg businesses, industries and offices. Frank von Borstel, county 4-H extension agent, conducted the tour. At noon, the group gathered on the courthouse lawn for lunch and to hear a brief address by Wayne Crooch, C. C. president. In the afternoon, Jack Wells, Independence, who lived for a time as an International Farm Youth Exchange delegate in Bolivia, talked to the youngsters. Each of the 270 has completed a 300-word essay on some phase of marketing in order to become eligible for the trek to Roseburg. Prizes were awarded the top entries, and other prizes during the day also were presented to outstanding members. Von Borstel said the visitors were the largest such group ever to come to the city on Marketing Day. Club members participating this year came from Gardiner, Heedport, Yoncalla, Scotts Valley, Sutherlin, Timonium, Myrtle Creek, Riddle, Days Creek, Tillier and Roseburg.

Resident's Help Needed In Successful Planning

previous experience in 'selling' the usefulness of planning and zoning pointed out that people will welcome such development if they understand what the commission is trying to do. The county commission will attempt through various means to fully inform county residents of what is involved so that a proposal for zoning authority can be placed on the ballot for the general election, Nov. 2. Although actual zoning is a long way in the future, most authorities agree the county commission could not do a really good job without approval of zoning by the people. Presently the commission can go ahead and such planning measures as subdivision supervision and establishment of building codes, but the commission feels zoning also should be a part of orderly county development. 'If development is not done in the right way and in the right place, property values go down,' Bell cautioned. 'Zoning is good business, even if you don't get anything more out of it than stabilization of values.' But emphasizing that much is to be done before zoning can be attempted, Bell said the planners 'must know the physical makeup of this county like the palms of their hands.' Complete surveys must be done, with studies made of general land use, recreation and park facilities and thoroughfares. Data must be compiled and maps drawn. Then, many local hearings will have to be held before any plan of operation would go into effect. This probably is several months away. Even without approval of the county voters, local districts could petition the county court for zoning. But, it is felt that overall county zoning would be much more beneficial. It was emphasized, however, that many areas, agricultural, grazing and timber for example, do not come under Oregon's planning and zoning statutes. Also, erroneous impressions concerning the work of the commission must be corrected. It was pointed out that the commission will not be telling people what kind of house or other buildings they can build on their property, where to locate their well or things like that. Misunderstandings along that line usually bring initial opposition. But, again emphasizing that planning is cooperation, Bell said, 'We don't tell them what to do. We help them, by showing them ways of logical, orderly development for the benefit of themselves and their neighbors.'
