

Bill Hartman Takes Top Honors At 2-Day Rodeo

A Brahma heist called "Smiley," who came roaring out of the chute and upset his passenger in some quick gyrations in which he tried to hook his horn under Knoblock's leg. The bull flipped Knoblock, then boosted him into the air. As Knoblock came down, the bull stomped him in the midsection. Amazingly, the California cowboy was unhurt, but the fearless clowns, Bill Landis and Roseburg's Wild Bill Markley, probably saved him from more mauling.

It was announced, incidentally, that Markley was taking part in only this show this year. He has retired.

Two of the animal stars of the show lived up to their billing. A bull, named Blue Bell Wrangler, kept his record intact of not having been ridden in over a year. He tossed Ralph Sappington of San Francisco easily, and the "wild one," Klamath, was bronc enough to throw Tuffy Eederer.

In one of the featured side-sidelights, the queen, Ginger Voelker, was again left behind in her race. It was won by Sutherland Princess Evelyn Frotischer.

Mystery Posed In Heir's Death, Revision Of Will

CHICAGO — Authorities today intensified their investigation of the mysterious death of the 26-year-old heir to a million dollars after being told the young man revised his will recently to make his fiancée principal beneficiary and had expressed doubt he would live to come into his own inheritance.

Montgomery Ward Thorne was found dead in his studio apartment Saturday. Coroner Walter E. McCarron said there were four needle marks on his arms but no evidence he was a user of narcotics.

The coroner ordered an analysis of vital organs.

He said he also has sent investigators to Birmingham, Mich., to interview the 25-year-old daughter of a prominent Birmingham family. He said the girl, an art student, occupied an apartment adjoining Thorne's until Friday.

McCarron did not name her. Jay Stough, who said he had been young Thorne's lawyer for some time, told Detective Capt. Harry Penzin that Thorne less than 10 days ago changed his will to make Miss Maureen Ragen, 18, chief beneficiary and executor.

Penzin quoted Stough as saying Thorne, grandson of a former president of Montgomery Ward & Co., "was afraid he would never live to collect his inheritance. He asked me to assume that there would be a very thorough investigation — if he died."

Stough said Thorne would have begun receiving $1,000 a month income from the estate of his father, Gordon C. Thorne, after this 21st birthday in October. The father's will provided the income would jump to $3,000 a month at age 30 and the son would be allotted the principal of his inheritance — estimated at a million dollars — at age 35, the lawyer said.

Miss Ragen, to whom young Thorne's will left half of his estate, is the granddaughter of the late James M. Ragen, racing news service publisher who was shot down by gang assassins in 1946.

The new will directs the remainder of young Thorne's estate be divided among relatives, including one eighth to his mother, Mrs. Marion Thorne.

Mrs. Thorne, fourth wife of Gordon C. Thorne, whom he married in 1929 after she, a nurse, cared for him through an illness, was sole beneficiary under the son's original will, Stough said. That will, the lawyer said, was drawn soon after the boy's 18th birthday.

Young Thorne, a freshman at Fordham University, and Miss Ragen had been planning to be married in December, Stough said.

in the fir belt of Oregon and Washington had not been struck by the AFL and negotiations with them were continuing, including those in the Portland area.

The AFL union did not call out its members in California, Idaho, Montana and Nevada pine belt. The CIO in the pine belt has left strikes up to locals while keeping them advised of the fir belt situation. Some pine operations, however, are shut down by strikes.

Most major lumber operators have refused to offer any kind of pay increase, contending that conditions of the industry do not warrant it. They have generally offered to renew the present contracts.

Walter Durham, manager of the Lumbermen's Industrial Relations Committee, an employer group, said that the union had settled without a wage increase with 17 operators employing 4,585.

Anti-McCarthy Solon Facing Maine Primary

PORTLAND, Maine — Maine puts its vote on the line today in a primary in which Sen. Margaret Chase Smith contends that Sen. McCarthy (R-Wis.) apparently planted the man opposing her.

That is the closest Mrs. Smith has come to openly accusing the Red-hunting Wisconsin Senator of attempting to engineer her defeat in the Republican senatorial primary.

And it was her nearest approach to a direct attack on her competitor, Robert L. Jones.

Jones is a McCarthy supporter. Mrs. Smith definitely is not.

A Jones victory would be a tremendous upset and political fore-casters around the state picked Mrs. Smith as an easy 3-1 or 4-1 winner.

Rep. Robert Hale (R-Maine) seeks GOP renomination for a seventh term.

Both candidates for governor are unopposed, Gov. Burton M. Cross on the Republican ticket and Edmund S. Muskie of Waterville, Democratic.

Bulldogging, Roping, Riding Shown At Best

Federer, Cheyenne, Wyo., was fourth.

In the bareback broncs, it was Bill Hartman, Seattle, who put on the best performance. He rode "Vagabond Lady" down. Shorty Horn, Klamath Falls, was second; Jack Middleton, Red Bluff, Calif., third; and Kunkle was fourth.

Jespersen Top Roper

A Hornbrook, Calif., performer, Rep. Jespersen, roped and tied his calf in 16.1 seconds to win top Saturday money in that division. Ed Coffey, from New Mexico, was second in 19 flat; Dollarhide was third; and Leo Thorne, Grants Pass, fourth in 20.5. Jespersen's time was beaten twice, but penalties set Sherman Sullins, San Diego, and B. J. Pierce, Lovington, N. M., back 10 seconds apiece. Sullins time was 25.1 and Pierce's 25.2 seconds.

Dollarhide and Castro were far and away the best in the bulldogging. Two others, Kunkle at 11.1 seconds, and Coffey at 11.4 were more than three seconds behind. A Roseburg cowboy, Earl Morgan, appeared for seconds to have the field beaten, but judges ruled that his steer fell instead of being wrestled to the ground.

Cordon Wins Hard-Fought Victory Over Morse During Maneuvers On Cougar Bill

By A. ROBERT SMITH
News-Review Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Sen. Guy Cordon (R-Ore.) won a hard fought victory over his Oregon colleague, Sen. Wayne Morse, in a contest that ended in triumph not only for Cordon but the Eisenhower administration in the field of resource development.

Cordon successfully prevented Morse from killing off for this session of Congress final action on several bills which would implement the administration's "partnership" river development policy.

Morse, curiously enough, switched the scene of the battle from the field of his own normal preference — the Senate floor — to the field in which Cordon customarily maneuvers — the Senate cloakroom.

Here is what happened: Three "partnership" bills involving Oregon and Washington projects were referred for consideration to the Senate Public Works Committee: Cougar dam on the McKenzie River, Priest Rapids and John Day projects on the Columbia. The first two have been passed by the House. Favorable Senate action would give the administration its first tangible evidence of congressional endorsement of the "partnership" idea, which Morse has assailed repeatedly over the past year.

Morse, as a member of that committee, sought to slow down — if not halt — final approval of the bills by suggesting the committee hold hearings on them in the Pacific Northwest after Congress adjourns for the year. This would have killed off their chances in the 83rd Congress, requiring that they run the gauntlet all over again through both House and Senate in the 84th Congress that convenes next year.

Cordon, sponsor of the Cougar and John Day bills, but not on the committee, sought quick action on the Cougar bill by requesting it be sent to the Senate floor.

And so the battle between the two senators was joined — in the cloakroom where colleagues are collared and exhorted to support a given position or oppose a particular bill for such and such reasons. The Cougar dam project —

Raging Floods Sweep Iowa, Nebraska Areas

rode out flood crests and now face new crises.

Today was the beginning of the second week of daily outbursts of thunderstorms, occasional hail and high winds ranging up to tornado proportions. Rains have ranged to 10 inches and downpours of 5 inches or more have northwest and northern sectors.

Alfred Anderson, 18-year-old farm youth, disappeared while attempting to swim his horse across the raging Iowa River to reach some stranded cattle.

Developments included: Des Moines — Police boats evacuated more than 50 families along Four-Mile Creek after a 5-inch rain fell near Ankey, just north of Des Moines.

Sioux City — A 21-foot crest passed at midday Sunday on the Floyd River after more than 500 families had left their suburban homes as a precaution. A new peril rose after 3 1/2 inches of rain fell in five hours last night. More hard rains fell in the Floyd Valley above Sioux City.

Mason City — A 4-inch downpour in four hours Sunday night cut off all highways into Mason City and caused new flooding.

Fert Dodge — The Red Cross used all available trucks Sunday to evacuate 30 homes when the Des Moines River rose swiftly to flood stage.

In western Iowa, between Sioux City and Council Bluffs, thousands of acres were inundated when dikes broke near Turin and Kenbeck.

Involved but $7,500 kilowatts — was a minor item in the lives of other senators, who heard the contrary pleas in support from both Morse and Cordon.

The decision would be made by a vote of the 11 senators who comprise the flood control subcommittee of the Senate Public Works Committee. They met and they debated the issue behind closed doors on at least four occasions before the verdict was reached by which the Cougar bill was approved without further delay.

The battle reached a semi-wind-up over a week ago when Morse moved to defer further consideration and hold hearings in Oregon, but was defeated by a vote 5 to 5. Morse had lined up four Democrats to support him: Chavey (N.Mex.), Stennie (Miss.), Kerr (Okla.) and Burke (Ohio). Cordon had won the support of the fifth Democrat, Holland (Fla.) and four of the five Republicans: Chairman Bus (Conn.) Case (S. Dak.), Beall (Md.) and Upton (N. H.).

These lines held firm in the final vote, which became 6 to 5 when the lone absentee from the previous meeting, Kuchel (R. Calif.), was represented and voted for Cordon.

Cordon put on a stiff campaign of persuasion to break the back of Morse's stalling maneuver, and by so doing got favorable action on the Cougar bill, which virtually assures its passage by Congress within the next week or two. It is doubtful Morse will openly oppose the bill on the Senate floor, a position he has cautiously avoided to date.

Possibly, Morse will do as he did on another "partnership" bill that sailed through the Senate this past week — walk out of the chamber during its debate and return after it has been passed. This was a measure authorizing the Alabama Power Co. to build five power projects on the Coosa River in Alabama and Georgia, where federal authorization had been given in 1945 for comprehensive federal development that had never been started.

The power company would finance the entire venture at its own expense and assure comprehensive development of the river under terms of a Federal Power Commission license yet to be granted. The "partnership" feature enters only in this respect: the bill says that if Congress should later adopt a policy of reimbursing private interests for flood control and river navigation improvements, then this utility could collect for its investment in these features of the five dams.

The bill was sponsored not by the administration or its spokesman in Congress, but by Democratic Sen. Lister Hill and John Sparkman, with whom Morse is usually allied on the various issues before the Senate.

When it came up, Morse left the chamber. It was passed. He returned.

Did he oppose it in the committee as he had bucked Cougar? Senator Cordon wanted to know that too, apparently, when he asked Chairman Bush during debate on the Coosa bill whether the vote in committee had been unanimous.

Bush said he understood one vote against it had been cast, but this was not recorded so it could not be checked. A committee staff member reported that Morse had cast a vote of opposition.

But Bush told Cordon on the floor: "I do not think a record vote was taken in committee, because the opposition was confined to one vote. I thought that that vote had been changed in his last analysis, but I cannot say positively that it was."
