Camas Valley Reporter Converted Californian

By LORRAINE KESNER

Staff Writer, News-Review

A converted Californian is Mrs. William Cunningham, correspondent from Camas Valley.

Lou Cunningham was born in Missouri, but says she was a Californian at heart. When she moved to Oregon she frankly didn't like it. Having come from San Francisco, she found the change too great for her. Then recently, she took a trip to the Bay City, and, uhuh... "give me good old Oregon," she says.

Mrs. Cunningham has more in common with her fellow writers than her love of Oregon and her community. She is about the average age, which is of course an inviolate secret with every woman, and she is mother of two children. Both her children are grown, however, and are both of the female sex, so their ages, too must remain secret.

Her husband is a logger, and spends much time in the woods. He probably has a secret of his own; the knowledge of several choice streams where he can dip a line. That too, fits in perfectly with Mrs. Cunningham's hobbies, since she lists fishing at the top of them. Then, paradoxically, she lists fancy work, rug making and sewing right alongside.

Mrs. Cunningham is one of the "younger" correspondents, having been with the News-Review a little less than a year. Her heat includes all of the Camas Valley area, which she covers about twice a week and by telephoning each day. She has been responsible for several news breaks on logging accidents and fires and has proved herself dependable in getting the facts.

LOU CUNNINGHAM

One last item about Mrs. Cunningham. She is the grandmother of four children. That may not be so unusual, but then, not many grandchildren may lay claim to the fact that grandma is a newspaper reporter!
