UNPARDONABLE SIN

Charles V. Stanton

We have been following with much interest the criticisms of U.S. Senator Guy Cordon as voiced by State Senator Richard Neuberger, who aspires to Cordon's seat.

The only conclusion we can reach from Neuberger's charges is that Cordon isn't a Socialist. Neuberger seems to believe this is the cardinal sin.

Because Cordon has consistently opposed the give-away of taxpayer money, he should be displaced as United States Senator and Neuberger, who favors measures requiring a large outflow of taxpayer dollars, elected, according to Neuberger's theory.

Cordon is criticized by his Democratic opponent because he voted for economies and didn't support free-handed spending of public money, and because he opposed measures of socialistic tinge.

According to Neuberger and his cohorts, who want taxpayers to finance a government power monopoly, pay farmers for not growing crops, build hospitals and schools with public money, send more billions overseas, maintain huge and costly bureaucracies and dig up more dollars in addition to deficit spending, Cordon is failing miserably on the job.

He insists on economy, an untenable theory in the political books of the Socialist-Democrat.

SHAME ON HAL

Hal Boyle is one of our favorite authors. We love his daily column. It is seldom he misses the bullseye with his shafts of logic, philosophy and humor.

But when he advocates that American women hide their beauty behind bedsheets, with only their eyes showing, we must offer violent disagreement.

Can Hal Boyle, a man of keen wit and brilliant understanding, be so ennuied with life that he would abolish diversity and excitement? Can it be that any man identified with the profession of journalism would shun change? Never should a reporter fear the unexpected, the unusual, the freakish or the bizarre. Yet Hal Boyle would have our women garb themselves as the auxiliary to the Ku Klux Klan. For shame!

Soon friend Hal will repent those unkind thoughts and words.

We have reached the age where, to us, all women are beautiful. Thus we know, that as the years pass, Hal Boyle too will become more tolerant of women's foibles.

For his complaint that modern man, in these days of wires, stays and falsies, cannot know the woman he is getting, we utter a raucous "phooie." Has he forgotten bustles? And, for that matter, what man ever knew the woman he married? Or what man knows the woman he married, even though he may have lived with her for fifty years?

Horsetail hairdos, feminine crew cuts, squaw skirts, peasant blouses, bullfighter pants, and "shocking pink" weskits, just to mention a few, are fashions which put spice into life; which keep amazed men wondering what can come next.

Let Dior chant his reactionary tune. Perhaps fifty thousand Frenchmen can't be wrong, but one can. Let not American men be worried about what a lone Frenchman proposes. Besides, just take a look at the confused state of France.

No Hal, don't deny American women the right to keep their men fooled, even if they have to be foolish to do it.

Take off your dark glasses and become as confused as the rest of us.

Hal Boyle

NEW YORK (AP) — Some people believe Edward J. Touhey Jr. ought to get the Medal of Honor.

But the U. S. Army, when it gave big Ed his goodbye papers, stamped the word "undesirable" on them. This still grieves Touhey. He doesn't like being regarded as an undesirable hero.

"Either the Army should take me back into the service, or give me an honorable discharge," he said.

The point at issue is whether Touhey was right or wrong in knocking down eight Russian soldiers in Vienna five years ago.

"They say I caused an international incident," remarked Ed. "But I say the Russians started it. They got no right to push a man around and call him a spy. They got what they deserved."

The 6-foot-1 former military policeman now weighs 350, and he feels and in every pound, but he was a mere 240-pound brute of a boy, not quite 20 when the event happened that ruined his military career.

"I never got to tell my side of the story at the time," he complained. Here is his version:

"I had spent a month in the hospital with athlete's foot. When I got out I stopped at a bar. I drank a bottle of cognac—maybe more."

"I must have drunk it too fast because when I left the bar to go to the barracks I got on the wrong streetcar and fell asleep. When I woke up I saw I was in the international zone and got off."

"I was feeling bad and leaned against the wall of the Imperial Hotel, holding my stomach. It was a Russian hotel. A Russian officer and two armed sentries came out and made me go into the hotel. The officer called me a spy and said I had been taking pictures of Soviet personnel. Then they stood me against a wall and forcibly searched me. They were pretty rough."

"The Russian officer said he still thought I was a spy, even though he saw I didn't have any camera. He said I must have handed the camera to someone passing by."

"Then he said he was going to turn me over to the American military police. I got scared. I thought it was a trick—that he would take me back into the service, and I'd never get back.

"I made a bee-line for the door. A sentry put his bayonet to my stomach. I knocked it away, and the Russian officer grabbed me from behind. That's when I went berserk. I saw red."

Touhey turned and kneed the officer, who cried out, and then Russian soldiers poured in from every side. Working with both fists and an iron chair, Touhey mowed them down. They overwhelmed him once, but he broke free and crashed through a plate glass door before another wave of Russian reinforcements finally grounded him.

"They caught me and then broke three of my ribs, put a 3-inch gash in my head, and kicked out four of my teeth," Touhey recalled. "They also spit in my face and called me a capitalist dog."

International military police, attracted by the uproar, then came into the hotel and broke up the struggle.

"The Russians put the whole blame on me," Touhey recalled sorrowfully. "They said I'd fractured a colonel's skull and broken two guys' jaws."

Ed admits he made one serious error on that fateful morning.

"I shouldn't have drunk that cognac so fast," he said. "But I didn't start any trouble with the Russians. They did. And if I was in the same situation again, I'd do the same thing. The Russians are no good."

"When I was in the hospital later, one of our generals visited me and said, 'As an officer I have to hawl you out, but as a man I'd like to shake your hand.'"

But Touhey, unemployed since he was laid off by a steel mill, is now considering the Army ought to take him back—give him an honorable discharge.

way commission in the spending of a modest sum each year to bring tourists to our state.

The money comes out of gasoline tax revenues, and the theory is that the tourists will buy enough taxes on it to pay for the advertising and have a profit left for the State of Oregon. A deal like that sounds too good to be true—kinds like the guy who started a cat and rat farm and fed the rats to the cats and then killed the cats and skinned 'em and sold the skins and fed the cats back to the rats to raise more rats to raise more cats to raise more —

Heck! That thing could go on forever. Suffice it to say that the scheme to sell gasoline to the tourists to get gasoline tax money to buy more advertising to bring more tourists to buy more gasoline to bring in more tax money to buy more advertising to bring more tourists —

Holy suffering Pete! I seem to have got myself into the fix of the squirrel that goes out of its cage into the little revolving wheel to get some exercise to work up an appetite to eat more nuts to give him more strength to go out in the wheel to get more exercise to eat more nuts —

I give it up. What I'm trying to say is that the State of Oregon advertising project has worked out. Year after year for nearly two decades the gasoline tax money paid by tourists coming to Oregon has brought in money enough to pay the advertising bills and leave a handsome profit for the state besides.

That brings me up to what I started out to say in the first place.

Some years ago we were all gathered together in a meeting whose purpose was to plan themes for next year's advertising. We simply ITCHED to show beautiful pictures of a tourist standing on the bank of an Oregon stream and casting his fly far out over the bubbling riffles. We knew we didn't dare show him actually HAILING IN THE FISH. That would turn the hair up on the back of every native Oregon fisherman who would quite naturally want to catch the fish himself instead of letting some outsider come and get them. But we thought maybe a picture of a fisherman casting his fly but not actually getting anything to put in the basket might get by.

We chewed the idea over and over, but in the end we gave it up. That's why you don't see in Oregon's advertising any thrilling pictures of tourists standing on the banks of Oregon streams and casting their flies.

I still think the theme would be a good one. Everybody knows that the tourist fishes in streams BE-SIDE PAVED ROADS. And everybody in Oregon knows no fish can be caught in such places. We could lure the tourist here with these lovely pictures and when he didn't catch anything he'd probably shrug his shoulders and say they just aren't biting today.

But we've never got up nerve enough to give it a trail. No fisherman ANYWHERE ever wants to risk bringing outsiders in to catch the fish that he himself might catch otherwise.

Finding six senators out of 96 who would serve on the special committee to investigate Senator McCarthy's actions was not an easy task. The selections finally made are of revealing interest.

The Republicans chosen are Senators Watkins of Utah, Case of South Dakota and Carlson of Kansas. The Democrats are Senators Edwin Johnson of Colorado, Stennis of Mississippi and Ervin of North Carolina.

The argument is advanced that they were picked chiefly because they had not taken strong public positions on McCarthy, and presumably were qualified to sit in judgment on his conduct. This may be so, but the fact is there are many senators who have avoided a public stance on the controversial Wisconsin senator.

Most senators, it is quite clear, wanted no part of this committee. Either they face re-election contests this year, or they come from states whose political complexion is so mixed that they deem it unsafe to be involved in this ticklish matter.

The outstanding thing about the six senators named to serve is that they are in politically safe positions. Let's look at them. Watkins does not face the voters again until 1958, and of late Utah has been pretty consistently Republican. Case and Carlson, of South Dakota and Kansas, respectively, represent states which generally run 60 to 65 per cent Republican.

On the Democratic side, Johnson of Colorado is retiring from the Senate at the end of his term this year. Stennis is from politically safe Mississippi, and anyway does not come up again until 1968. Ervin is from another safe southern state, North Carolina, and besides is merely an appointed interim successor to the late Senator Hoey.

These are the realities which underlie the selections. That the men were picked in this manner does not mean the inquiry will suffer. There is considerable ability and experience among this group, and the public must now hope that it is applied with full vigor to the job at hand.

The Senate launched this inquiry in three years with the Army I never went AWOL once," he said. "I understand they even were considering giving me a good conduct ribbon at the time this whole thing happened."

Flames Rout Buffalo In Alaska Forest Fire

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (AP) — An uncontrolled forest fire threatened homes and chased buffalo in a vast area just south of the Big Delta junction on the Alaska Highway Thursday.

More than 200 firefighters succeeded in preventing destruction

Immunity Bill For Witnesses Passes Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Wednesday passed and sent to the White House a bill to allow the granting of immunity from federal prosecution to witnesses whose testimony is desired in investigations of subversive activity.

By voice vote, after a three minute explanation of its terms by Sen. McCarran (D-Nev.), the Senate accepted a House-passed version of the measure.

Only Sen. Lehman (D-Lib-N.Y.) voiced objections. He said he wanted the record to show that he was voting "no" on the bill—not because I necessarily object to the bill but because of the way in which it was handled."

He said it should have had more consideration before the vote.

The measure is a new version of one which the Senate had passed last year over objections of the late Sen. Robert A. Taft (R-Ohio), the then Republican floor leader, that it would permit "immunity baths" for favored witnesses.

The revised version would give the federal courts the power to grant the immunity, on request of a congressional investigating committee and with the concurrence of the attorney general.

It also would allow federal courts and federal grand juries to offer immunity for desired testimony from a witness invoking the protection of the fifth amendment against compulsory self-incrimination.

Flood Control Measure Slated For Senate Action

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill to authorize a billion dollar program of flood control and navigation projects probably will come before the Senate early next week.

Senate officials said Friday indications are the Senate will not take up the bill before Monday or Tuesday.

The Senate Public Works Committee approved the bill last month and thus cleared the way for Senate consideration.

The committee accepted without change the 147 projects in the bill as passed by the House and added 35 involving a federal cost of $169,113,600.

The House bill authorized a total federal cost of $910,271,514.

The 182 projects in the Senate committee's bill would cost the government $1,059,385,114. In addition, the bill would authorize a 20-million-dollar appropriation for watershed projects administered by the Agriculture Department.

In some cases local interests would contribute a share of the total cost of a project.

Congress must vote construction funds before projects authorized by the bill could be undertaken.

Police Tracing Usher Who Took Collection

PORTLAND (AP) — Police are looking for a church usher who disappeared here along with $500 from last Sunday's collection at the First Methodist Church.

The Rev. O. Maxwell Graham, assistant minister, said two ushers counted the money after the services Sunday, and one of the ushers then volunteered to take the money to a night depository vault at a Portland bank.

The money and the usher have not been seen since. Police identified the missing man as Robert L. Johnson, 25.
