Cold-Causing Viruses Are Described At Health Meet

By ALTON L. BLAKESLEE
Associated Press Science Editor
BUFFALO, N.Y. — When friends ask if you've got a cold or grippe, you may be right in saying, "No, it's A.R.D." or, "the doctor thinks it's R.I.-67," or, "just a touch of A.P.C."
For these are the names of new virus diseases described Tuesday to the American Public Health Assn.

They cause infections which apparently fall about midway between the common cold and virus pneumonia.
A.R.D. stands for acute respiratory disease of recruits, so named because it was found to hit mainly new recruits at Army camps during World War II. It brings fever, chilliness, headaches and aches and pains, hoarseness and scratchy throat.
A new-found virus, R.I.-67, is at least one cause of A.R.D., said M. R. Hilleman, Ph.D., and associates of the Army medical service graduate school, Washington, D. C.

Unlike the flu virus, the R.I.-67 group of viruses causes illness during summer months as well as during the cold or cool seasons.
Dr. Hilleman said blood test studies show that a majority of us seem to have had earlier bouts with these viruses.
Dr. Hilleman's research group said R.I.-67 viruses seem to be related to the family of "A.P.C." viruses discovered recently by Drs. R. J. Huebner, W. P. Rowe and associates of the National Microbiological Institute, Bethesda, Md. A.P.C. stands for adenoidal-pharyngeal-conjunctival.

This team of researchers has isolated nearly 150 strains of viruses from adenoids, tonsils, and secretions from the eyes and throat. Dr. Huebner said they seem to belong to at least six different types, all of which cause frequent human infections, beginning at an early age.
