INFERIORITY COMPLEX

By Charles V. Stanton

We realize that our readers have no particular interest in our personal problems and that we have no reason to publicize our own aches and ills. But as our trouble is about the only thing we have on our mind today, maybe we can get back in the groove by airing our complaint.

We've been bothered for several months with a burn leg. We've been to various doctors and have taken all kinds of treatment without any permanent relief. Finally our physician instructed us to see a specialist. So we went to Eugene to let the expert look us over.

Addy Wright, our assistant business manager, recently underwent surgery for an ailment somewhat similar to our own. We had expected to get the same treatment.

Naturally, the thought of surgery brought dread. On the other hand, there were some advantages to be considered, in addition to the prospect of being freed from our handicap.

We have had a decided feeling of inferiority in social circles. Whenever we joined with a group of friends, we had to hang our head in shame while those around us talked of their operations.

One by one they could detail their experiences, each endeavoring to outdo the rest in his recital. Gore usually runs deep at any social session when the subject turns to operations, and seldom is the topic avoided.

The Reason For Pinocchio

As we made our way to Eugene, we were filled with dread of pain and suffering to follow our anticipated surgery. But our spirits were sustained by the thought that at last we would be able to hold our own in social converse. We would be able to compete.

Of course, our competition wouldn't have been really top grade. Most of our friends have been unbuttoned down the front. They can describe what happened to their innards. Had our expectations been fulfilled, we'd have been turned over. That would have been a handicap, to be sure, but we'd have made the best of it.

But now our inferiority complex has been compounded. No operation!

How can we hold up our head among our friends? We can only avoid those places where our acquaintances gather to exchange tales of experiences with scalpels and hypodermics, with doctors and nurses, and the intense suffering endured with stoic indifference.

When these reviews of grand openings are related, what confusion we feel as we try to compete with our only experience at the surgeon's hands the time we had our tonsils out!

No, we can't hold up our end of the conversation. Our inferiority complex remains undiminished.

That's why we'll seek our fellowship at the pinocchio table, where the only operation under discussion is the post-mortem over the playing of the last hand.

Horrendous Inventions

The specialist could find no need for surgery. Except for the effect on our ego, we were delighted by that finding.

Our delight, however, has diminished somewhat.

We were directed to the maker of orthopedic appliances. Upon the doctor's prescription he compounded a horrendous invention—a garment with buckles, straps, braces, stays, laces, snaps, pulleys and hoists, all designed to gouge, scrape, pull and pinch in unison.

"You'll curse me, the doctor, the garment, your work and your friends for the first few days you wear this thing," said the man who fitted us into the contraption.

No truer words were ever spoken.

It takes an engineering degree to get in and out of all the harness applied to our tender midsection. We have a steel brace up our spine.

We've often been accused of being stiff-necked, but never of lacking backbone.

But maybe it's all for the best.

Under the assaults of our friends, who resent our anti-socialist editorial opinions, perhaps we'll need some extra stiffening for our spine during the closing days of the campaign.

NEW YORK (AP)—Any mother who has survived the tense ordeal of preparing her moppet for a grammar school pageant might regard Mrs. Alice Viola Clements with awe.

For Mrs. Clements, the show world's most durable foster mother has auditioned some 300,000 talented and not so talented children in a quarter of a century.

More than 12,000 kids have appeared on "Auntie Alice's" famous "Children's Hour" Sunday program over WNBC and WNET here. The program, which recently celebrated its silver anniversary, has been a springboard for many now famous entertainers.

"So far as we've been able to find," said Mrs. Clements, "it's the oldest continuous show in radio. It has gone on for some 1,300 consecutive weeks."

It is now only a part-time task for busy, warm-hearted Mrs. Clements, who was once a Broadway dancer herself. Five years ago, after the death of her husband, she took over the operation of his Philadelphia advertising agency.

Three days a week she commutes here, where she holds auditions, and writes, directs and produces her show.

She loves to work with children, handles them easily with a firm knowing kindness.

"I had twins, but lost them as babies," she said, quietly. "Since then, I've—well, I've learned to be fond of other people's children."

Each year she contributes to the education of a number of talented children whose parents can't afford to give them the training they need.

"I've always been interested in show business," she said. "I was mortal novel, was a gay and wise-cracking character.

I suppose, in this case, we'll have to say that D'Astagnan is Adlai.

Continuing in the Dumas vein, Aramis Porter (who is running for congress against Harris Ellsworth in Oregon's fourth congressional district) told a gathering of members of the International Longshore Workers Union at Coos Bay that he FAVORS ADMITTING RED CHINA TO THE UNITED NATIONS.

Question: Will Athos Neuberger and Por-tos Ullman go along with him on that?

After all, you know, the motto of the Three Musketeers was: "All for One and One for All."

In conclusion today, I'd like to quote Charlie Sprague, who said the other day in his "It Seems to Me" column in his Salem Statesman:

"It's time we got some sense in this (election year) campaigning. Democratic big guns and little guns are laying down such a barrage of 'giveaway' that an utterly fantastic portrait of Republicans of known integrity is being fashioned."

"They picture these public servants as giving away the natural resources of the country, shamelessly and recklessly. They dress up Guy Cordon in a pirate suit and Doug McKay also, virtually classifying them as yeggs out to plunder the public domain."

"Those who know these men know they are men of high character, conscientious in the performance of their public duty, not subject to ulterior influence."

Sprague concludes: "Like Amos and Andy, 'we're regu-lated' with this type of campaigning. Cordon and McKay are not pirates and are not dumb tools of special interests. They are trying to serve the public interest in all honesty and prudence."

I quite agree with you, Charlie. This congressional campaign that is being waged in Oregon by the Democratic big guns and little guns, as you term them, is a disgusting and a sickening thing.

But I suppose we must remember philosophically that while our two-party political system is the best in the world it is based upon a STRUGGLE FOR POWER between the two parties. The New Dealers are OUT and they're trying to get back IN.

That's what is going on now. I agree with you that it ISN'T an edifying spectacle.

ments a new car if she'd put his child on her show. A jeweler offered her an expensive watch on the same basis.

"I had to turn them both down," she laughed. "The children get on the show only by their own talents. We don't audition their parents' pocketbooks."

"Mrs. Clements believes that encouraging children to develop their talents helps cut down juvenile delinquency."

"A child trying to become good in anything simply doesn't have time to get into trouble," she said. She has found that child ventriloquists usually are the most highly intelligent of young performers, young comics the most mischievous.

"It's hard to hold their attention—they are always trying to make me laugh," she said. "But I suppose I really love them best of all. I always dreamed of being a comedienne—but I wasn't!"

That is the key to "Auntie Alice's" success. She shares the yearning behind every child's most impossible dream, and does what she can to help it come true.

Brownell Says Justice Dept. Fulfills Promise

WASHINGTON (AP)—Atty. Gen. Brownell reports his justice department staff had carried out a promise made in 1952 "to restore public confidence" in the department.

Brownell addressed the U. S. district attorneys gathered here from all parts of the country, its territories and possessions for a three-day conference at justice headquarters.

He said it was their next task "to retain public confidence" by maintaining a high plane of ethics and professional competence which would demonstrate that the present administration is both "efficient and humane."

Noting that the prosecuting staff in the field represents almost a 10 per cent turnover since the Republicans came in, Brownell said:

New Attractions Added To Plans For Turkey Show

A new attraction has been announced for the Northwestern Turkey Show to be held in Roseburg Nov. 18-20.

Four entertainment sessions have been planned for the show. Manager Dick Turley said Thursday. They'll include two luncheon sessions and Friday and Saturday night shows—Nov. 19 and 20.

Directing the entertainment, Turley said, will be Gordon Howard. Turley said the idea was to make use of as much of the talent that had been set for the recently-canceled Elks Charity Minstrel Show.

Howard will contact the persons to be used in the show entertainment.

In a statement Friday morning Howard said: I hope that we can use many of those people who were disappointed in the cancellation of the minstrel show.

With the addition of the entertainment feature, Turley said he believed the Turkey Show would be the best ever held.

GLASHEAT PREFERRED IN NEW HOME BUILDING

In ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO, it is not an unusual thing to see large groups of people inspecting the many model homes erected for sale in this "city of new homes," but one sunny Sunday recently, thousands were attracted to 3204 Loma Vista Place. At that time Blumenthal Bros., Construction Co., Albuquerque builders, invited the public to view a home they had completed for Mr. and Mrs. R. Earl Miller.

Aside from the interesting architectural designing on the interior as well as the exterior, what set this house apart from all others was the fact that for the first time in New Mexico, electricity had been used for home heating. Cooperating with the Blumenthal Brothers was the Continental Radiant Glass Heating Corporation, who have perfected electric heating paneling known as "glasheat," and the electric utility, Public Service Co. of New Mexico. The finished result is a home equipped with glass heating panels in each room, with each heating zone operated by an individual thermostat. The advantage of this type of control is that heat requirements in one room will not affect those in other parts of the house. This assures even distribution of heat in the "living" area and decreases to a marked degree the build-up of ceiling-height heat.

most of which is wasted. The infrared rays from the Glasheat panel have no need for blower fans or any other type of mechanical circulation, therefore there are no drafts. This, plus the fact that each room has its own thermostat which automatically controls the heat output, assures the Millers unvarying comfort without the "lag" that is present with other types of heating systems. With a Glasheat system of heating, there is no problem of adjusting or cleaning—no moving parts to wear out, consequently, it solves many important problems facing the home owner.

In Roseburg, Continental Glasheat is sold and serviced exclusively by Lansing-Oliver, 847 S. Stephens St. Here, home owners and prospective home builders can obtain information and estimates without any obligation whatsoever.

Many model homes in the Northwest are featuring Continental Glasheat thus giving a true indication of the completely modern trend to provide economical home comfort. Heating engineers from coast to coast agree that Continental Glasheat is fast surpassing other types of heating system and has been placed on the "preferred" list by most discriminating home owners and builders.
