Steady sales mean continuous payrolls

The steady movement of forest products from the Pacific Northwest to their markets depends upon good salesmanship and customer service. And successful marketing means steady plant operations, steady payrolls, and stable communities. Sales and service functions require well organized facilities in principal buying areas all across America. The map above shows where approximately 1,700 people are devoting their full time to distributing, selling and servicing Weyerhaeuser forest products. In the face of stiffening competition this activity becomes more and more important. The Company has focused increasing attention on these factors in recent years with a view to stabilizing and expanding markets for its products. At the same time every effort has been made to increase manufacturing efficiency and quality so that Weyerhaeuser products can meet the competition of other materials.

This is important to the economy of our region because a big part of income received from the sale of forest products is distributed here in the form of pay checks, taxes, purchases of supplies, materials and services. The Company also reinvests a substantial part of its earnings in plant additions, equipment and roads. The purpose is to increase production, improve manufacturing efficiency and gain greater utilization of the forest crop. The end result is greater economic stability for this region.
