

Attorney Says White Folks Won't Send Their Children To School With Negroes

By JERRY T. BAULCH
WASHINGTON (AP) — A South Carolina attorney told the Supreme Court here the white people in the Clarendon School District of his state would not send their children to public schools with Negroes.

S. E. Rogers, of Summerton, S. C., made the statement when Chief Justice Warren asked him whether an "honest attempt" would be made to comply with whatever the court orders as to when and how segregation must end.

"Let's get the word honest out of this," Rogers replied.

He added that the white people would not comply if it meant sending their children to school with Negroes.

Justice Burton spoke up to suggest that Rogers was not saying the white people would "violate" the decree, but merely would not send their children to unsegregated schools.

Justice Frankfurter demanded whether Rogers was suggesting in his argument that the Supreme Court reconsider its declaration of last May 17 that race segregation in public schools is unconstitutional.

"No sir," Rogers replied. "We are asking an opportunity to work it out on the local level."

Rogers was the lead-off attorney for school districts in South Carolina and Virginia which are demanding an indefinite delay in wiping out of the color line in schools.

Rogers followed two attorneys for Negro parents, Thurgood Marshall and Spotswood Robinson III, who demanded that the court issue decrees ending segregation by the next school year in September or by September 1956 at the latest.

Marshall hit at the plea from Virginia and South Carolina for opportunity to work the matter out at the local level. He said they were asking for "local option" or else for a moratorium on the 14th Amendment.

From the states, the plea has been against any rush.

Kansas and Delaware, whose views were given Monday, asked time and freedom to integrate in their own way.

Power Co. Says Answer Not Ready On Dam Deal

PORTLAND (AP) — Pacific Power & Light Co. said here it is too early to tell whether the firm will want to participate in the proposed Yellowtail project in Montana.

But the company "definitely" is interested in studying the proposed project to determine if it is feasible for Pacific Power to participate in construction, a spokesman for President Paul B. McKee said.

"It is only recently that our interest was solicited," the spokesman said, adding that the first such proposal came from the Billings Chamber of Commerce about a month ago.

A definite answer will go to Congress and the Interior Department as soon as possible, the spokesman said, explaining that engineering, financing, and marketing problems would have to be studied first.

Pacific Power markets electricity in Wyoming, near the proposed dam.
