EXPULSED—Ailing Hungarian Premier Imre Nagy (right) was dismissed from office and expelled from his Communist Party posts. Nagy was accused of putting consumer goods ahead of heavy industry, same charge that brought about downfall of Soviet leader Georgi Malenkov. Succeeding Nagy was Andras Hegedues (far left), former agriculture minister. Above, the latter listens as Nagy delivers inauguration speech at Budapest in 1953.

WIRED FOR WEIGHT—This cow in Gateshead, England, is being watched—all the time. The harness on its back holds electronic equipment that records every movement the cow makes—tail swishing, walking, bending and chewing. By determining the number of mouthfuls of grass that goes to each pound the cow gains, scientists hope to discover which type of grass does the best job of fattening cattle.
