As a traveling researcher, Miss Lane tests new driving aids, gadgets, investigates places of sight-seeing interest and checks on accommodations and services available to the motoring public.

Her primary intent is to find ways to increase the touring enjoyment of the millions of American motoring families. As women's travel director for the Shell Oil Company, Miss Lane's activities necessitate over 60,000 miles of travel throughout the country annually.

In her talk here, Miss Lane will discuss a new kind of freedom of the road, "Vagabondage, USA."

She will share with her audience her travel-tested ideas for enjoying the adventure and enrichment of motor meandering.

In addition, Miss Lane will describe a number of practical hints for the woman motorist and her family. These include information on selecting suitable accommodations and restaurants, how to turn the family car into a child's "text-book-on-wheels," how to pre-plan travel and travel budgets, and how to take a "Tourette."

Often called the first lady of touring, Miss Lane is noted as the author of a national newspaper column, numerous magazine articles, helpful booklets and "Traveling By Car," a new family guide to better vacations.
