Talk On Education Given AAUW Members

More people are fired for not being able to get along with others than for not being able to do the job," Mrs. Betty Lou Dunlop, immediate past State Education Chairman of the American Association of University Women, told AAUW members at the May meeting of the Roseburg Branch Wednesday evening. Mrs. Dunlop spoke on "What Should Our Schools Accomplish?" She stressed raising the general intellectual level of the schools; fostering an "intellectual elite." She pointed out that this depends upon the program before the high school level. She contrasted this with the nation wide trend of recognizing the "athletic elite."

Mrs. Dunlop placed discipline as a second accomplishment, holding up a self-disciplined individual as a person of dignity. The schools should create an atmosphere where dignity is part of the child's training. In contrast she showed that schools cannot create such an atmosphere for the child as long as society continues with sensationalism and lawlessness.

"Young people should be made enterprising with ideas," Mrs. Dunlop insisted. They should be made to see that ideas which will produce statesmen and scientists can spark people to be enterprising, just as strongly as the dollar sign.

"Cooperation is the key to society and always has been," Mrs. Dunlop said. She demonstrated that cooperation can be accomplished through movement and communication of pupils in the classroom, citing this as progressive education and not bedlam as too many people have assumed. She summed up the old, automatic type of teaching by asking, "Is the best education looking at the back of another person's head? Can cooperation be learned that way?"

Mrs. Dunlop brought out four additional points. Since there are so many fine young people of moral integrity in the schools she would have good behavior recognized and so much talk about delinquency given a back seat for a change.

She would train for social ability. She would recognize and encourage those with practical, creative ability in mechanical and artistic fields.

Last of all Mrs. Dunlop would have the withdrawal type recognized, those with emotional problems who won't accept anything.

JOSEPH LANE PTA SETS MEETING WEDNESDAY
