Enough Refrigeration for 109,000 homes helps make Oregon's own fine beer
your better buy!

In Portland's big Blitz brewery, as in any housewife's kitchen, refrigeration facilities are mighty important.

Take the natural process of fermentation, for example, which happens after near-boiling mash extract is rapidly cooled to precisely 48°F. Or the aging and finishing of Blitz beer in spotless, freezing-cold cellars filled with glass-lined steel tanks, each big enough to hold more than 18,000 gallons.

And, like the "vegetable crispier" in a modern refrigerator, Blitz Weinhard's hop storage room is cooled and humidified to the exact point known to be best for holding the delicate flavors of choicest hops.

It's Dr. Max Zimmermann, Blitz brewmaster and world-renowned beer-making authority, who watches over the temperature in all parts of the brewery. He knows that carefully-controlled refrigeration is one of many factors behind the light, clean beer taste you prefer.

Here's another reason why, for beer that always tastes best ...to you and your guests... Better Buy Blitz!

BLITZ WEINHARD
Oregon's Own Fine Beer
Blitz Weinhard Co., Portland, Oregon

"BETTER BUY Blitz!"
As close as his phone, these temperature graphs keep the Blitz brewmaster, Dr. Max Zimmermann, constantly informed of exact temperatures in every area of the Blitz Weinhard brewery.
