

Two Women Beaming Over Accomplishments In Swim Class Of Mentally Retarded

Two Roseburg women Friday were beaming over the accomplishments of a two-week swimming class for mentally retarded children.

Mrs. Edward Tauscher, teacher of the swimming class, and Mrs. Alice Johnson, who requested the class, feel that a new path has been blazed.

At the end of the two-week period, two children could swim unassisted across the pool, two could swim two or three strokes unassisted, and two had learned to use their arms and legs unassisted. "I felt that it was worth the time and effort spent to see what each child accomplished," Mrs. Tauscher said.

The biggest problem that Mrs. Tauscher and her four assistants had to cope with was getting the children mentally adjusted to the water. One day a child would be all right, and the next day he would have an "off" day. Mrs. Tauscher also said that each child had to be watched at all times.

It took some pioneering before Mrs. Tauscher could even start the swimming classes for the children. Apparently no such program had ever been recorded. She contacted Ralph E. Carlson, director of first aid and water safety for the Red Cross Pacific area, the Red Cross had never had any such class in the United States. Undaunted, Mrs. Tauscher, with ideas offered by other people, started the program from scratch. The results were heart warming. But this is only the beginning. Mrs. Tauscher hopes to hold one or two more periods of teaching to make sure the children haven't forgotten what they learned. Meanwhile, she will keep experimenting. She is going to try to find out if harnesses like ones used in tumbling can be used to aid children such as these in swimming.

Mrs. Tauscher's assistants in the pioneering project were Tamara Tauscher, Susie Lee, Peter Leiken and Bob Geddes. Classes were held at the private pool at the Sidney Leiken home on Harvard Ave.

NATO Endorses Plan For Geneva Conference

ern planning yesterday.

GENEVA (AP) — The heads of the Big Four governments journeyed toward Geneva today optimistic their historic summit talks would at least find methods and machinery to solve the major cold war problems.

This view was expressed specifically by President Eisenhower and Soviet Premier Bulganin on the eve of their departure for the parley, which begins Monday. Britain's Prime Minister Eden and high French sources were also optimistic.

Eden, Eisenhower, Bulganin and French Premier Faure were due to arrive here before nightfall.

As the stage was set for the talks, it appeared that all four powers were in agreement that the parley should deal primarily with procedure and methods and that good will all around might lay the groundwork for a stable peace.

Local Department Store Wins Sales Competition

Miller's Dept. store in Roseburg has won first prize for greatest percentage gain in sales for June 1955 over the average for the two previous Junes, according to Rod Neveu, manager.

The employees of the store were competing with 14 other department stores located in the northwest. The record posted won employees of the local store a bonus.

The contest was part of the store's recently completed 30rd anniversary sale. F. E. Miller, Portland, president of the firm, was in Roseburg Thursday to pass out congratulations.

YOUR BODY

ROSEBURG, OREGON — These health articles are written and paid for by Dr. B. A. SMITH, Chiropractic and Naturopathic Physician, 1500 Garden Valley Road, in the interest of public health and to help you understand the body function. Look for these informative articles every Saturday.

Protein is one of the chief materials needed to build tissue. Muscles and bone are the two most abundant tissues of the body. Nerve tissue forms only about two per cent of the body weight, while the skin, cartilage, tendons, etc., also constitute but a small proportion of the whole. Fatty tissue is present in varying amounts.

Protein is an essential part of every cell in the body, but is present in relatively small amounts in the inactive tissues, bone and fat. The bulk of the active tissue in the body is made up of muscles, both voluntary and involuntary, and by far the most prominent solid constituents of muscle tissue are the proteins. Muscles contain about twenty-five per cent of solid matter, of which four-fifths is protein material.

It is self-evident that a supply of protein would be necessary for the building of new tissue, especially of new muscular tissue. The building of new tissues is chiefly confined to the growth period or earlier years of life. In the adult there are many instances when the body is called upon to build new tissue, namely in pregnancy and lactation, in recuperation from wasting illness, and for muscle growth the results from exercise. In such cases the adult needs an extra supply of protein just as the child does. Even the adult who is not building any new tissue needs some protein supplied in his food, in order to provide for replacement necessitated due to wear and tear of the life processes upon his tissues. While it is scarcely true that every cell in the body dies and is replaced within a seven year period, as has been stated by some authorities, there still are constantly some casualties among the cells. Also the breaking down activities within the living cells result in changes which call for continual replacements. This replacement or repair requirement is naturally rather small in comparison with the growth requirement of protein needed in childhood, but it is not inconceivable and is absolutely indispensable to the well-being of the adult individual.

Smaller amounts of protein, or of special amino acids furnished by proteins, are needed for purposes other than actual tissue building—for the making of enzymes that are essential for digestion and metabolic processes in the tissues; for making such potent hormones as those of the Thyroid gland, adrenal glands and pancreas; for building the antibodies that help ward off infectious diseases; and for the protein part of hemoglobin, the oxygen-carrying component of the blood. It has also been found recently that certain amino acids give rise to nitrogen containing substances in muscle tissue. The amino acids supplied by protein are very essential to the welfare of the body in many ways. (Adv.)

DR. JOHN W. UNRUH . . . starts practice here

Eye Specialist Starts Practice In Roseburg Area

A doctor specializing in treatment of diseases and surgery of the eye has announced the start of his practice in Roseburg Monday.

He is Dr. John Unruh, here from the Midwest, via Portland, where he practiced since last September and also was on the teaching staff of the eye department of the University of Oregon Medical School. He also was on the staff of Emanuel Hospital and worked at Good Samaritan and Providence hospitals.

His Roseburg office will be located in the Pacific Building. His practice will be the only similar one between Medford and Eugene.

Dr. Unruh, a certified eye specialist, is a diplomate of the American Board of Ophthalmology. In his specialty, Dr. Unruh prescribes glasses, besides treating injuries, malformations and diseases and performing surgery of the eye.

Prior to coming to Oregon last fall, he had his residency in ophthalmology at the Kansas University Medical Center. The doctor graduated from the University of Nebraska in 1945 and spent a year in internship in Omaha before he went into the Navy for two years. After being discharged, he practiced in Little Rock, Ark., where he had been stationed for several months and was on the teaching staff of the University of Arkansas School of Medicine.

He is married and he and his wife, Doris, have four children: John, 10, Regina, 8, Becky, 5, and Tamara, 3. Dr. Unruh is a member of Nu Sigma Nu, a professional fraternity, and a member of the U. S. Naval Reserve.

Coincidentally, another John Unruh lives in Roseburg. The doctor, who has traveled extensively, commented that this is the first time he has found a namesake.

Eisenhower May Hold Back Funds From Projects

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower said Friday he will hold up start of construction on 107 waterway and reclamation projects for which Congress appropriated money. The projects were not in the budget.

Eisenhower disclosed his position as he signed, "with great reluctance," an omnibus appropriations bill including money for the Reclamation Bureau and the Army Engineers' program of flood control and navigation projects.

He said his reluctance stemmed from the fact that his requests for the Atomic Energy Commission were cut and his recommendations for waterway and reclamation projects were boosted.

Increases in the later categories, he said, would allow a start on 10 projects not included in the budget. As the hundreds of items in the bill fall into various groups there was no way of telling which projects the President had in mind. He didn't name them, but declared:

"Many of these projects which have been added by Congress have not had detailed engineering studies completed. As a result, we have no basis for determining their financial soundness and their ultimate cost to the federal government."

Initiation of the added projects, Eisenhower said, "cannot be undertaken until the detailed engineering plans have been completed and we have a sound basis for cost estimates."

Winston Chief's Home Stoned After Resignation

ed by the city of Winston.

Two delegations of Winston citizens, representing the Nichols and the neighbors talked over the situation Saturday morning with Dist. Atty. Robert Stults. Stults said both discussed possible legal action. He said he did not anticipate any signing of compacts.

He said he was visited first by a group of people representing the Nichols and later by a party of neighbors of the former fire chief numbering six.

Chief Nichols said at least 15 of the department volunteers resigned with him.

Nichols said his resignation came because of "friction with two board members. He indicated that personal animosity towards him by one unnamed board member had been instrumental in upsetting the harmony between the department, the board and some citizens.

Nichols had tendered his resignation on Wednesday but the board had delayed taking action on it, according to Chairman Jim Taber, until a replacement could be found. Last night they appointed Barney Shepherd, 34, Winston, to head the department.

Saturday Taber presented the board's picture. He said Nichols became provoked "the other night over a little deal" and offered to quit. Taber said the board called Nichols in last night and told him members had decided to accept his resignation. "He became a little provoked," Taber recalled, "and expressed himself vocally."

According to Taber, Nichols refused a request to return his badge and district credentials, telling the board to "come and get them."

Taber admitted there had been trouble brewing in the district for some time but declined to elaborate further. Saturday he termed Nichols "an ardent worker who deserves a lot of credit for what he's done in the district."

"We appreciate what he had done," Taber added, "and we hope for the benefit of the community he will help us and the department. We're surprised something like this would happen in the community." The chairman pointed out that if he (Nichols) had "come along and not beeped . . . he'd been chief today."

Meanwhile, the former chief had a few words to offer.

He pointed out he'd worked to build up the department since his appointment 15 months ago. Last year he said he gave up any prospect of being chief in order to have equipment for the district. As chief, he also had another full-time job in order to support his family. Nichols was appointed by Roy Finster, former president of the fire board. Nichols and his family said they were upset about action of their neighbors Friday night.

New chief Barney Shepherd said he had about three men working with him. Lyn Lengle was named new assistant chief. "We want to see the department continued," Chief Shepherd said Saturday, "and we're going to give it a try. He called a special meeting for Monday at 7 p.m. at the Winston Dillard Fire Hall for any persons interested in becoming a member of the department. He said volunteers get a small token payment for each fire.

General Taylor Says U. S. Army Versatile Enough

By ELTON C. FAY
QUANTICO, Va. (AP) — Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor declared Saturday the U. S. Army is versatile enough to "proportion its blows to fit the case."

He said the range of its capabilities extends "from the force of an M.P.'s truncheon to the kilotons of atomic weapons."

The new Army chief of staff made the statement in a briefing on the world-wide role of ground forces which he prepared for the annual defense secretaries' conference.

The official abstract of Taylor's remarks made no reference to the letter Gen. Matthew B. Ridgway, his predecessor, sent to Secretary of Defense Wilson two weeks ago.

In that farewell letter, Ridgway reiterated his opposition to producing Army manpower and spoke out against "overemphasis" on nuclear weapons.

From others the conferees heard Saturday some sobering words about achievements and aims of the Russian air force. However, they also had assurance that the United States still holds at least a qualitative superiority over the Red air fleet.

Some 170 civilians, generals and admirals are attending the annual briefing sessions at this marine corps base.
