

Immediate Power Or Low Costs Argued By Neuberger, Coon In Lakeview Debate

LAKEVIEW, Ore. — Is it more important to get electric power quickly for the Pacific Northwest, or to wait for low-cost power?

Sen. Neuberger (D-Ore) and Rep. Sam Coon (R-Ore) argued these points Wednesday night in the eighth of a series of 10 debates on Coon's bill for partnership construction of the proposed John Day Dam on the Columbia River.

Coon asserted the big need was for more power quickly. He told a crowd of 350 at this livestock and lumber area in south-central Oregon that his bill offered the only way to get more electricity quickly for the power-hungry Northwest.

Neuberger argued that power obtained that way would do good for private utilities. He said it would be high-cost power, of no benefit to industry or to farmers. "Oregon farmers need a market close to home. The only way to enlarge the local market is to secure new industries based on low-cost power. This can come with Bonneville's average industrial rate of 2.2 mills per kilowatt hour. It will never come with private company average industrial rate of 8.2 mills," Neuberger said.

"It is ridiculous for Congressman Coon to claim these private companies are concerned about rural users. Until the Bonneville system and the REA (Rural Electrification Administration) came into creation, the private companies had brought energy to only 21 per cent of Oregon farms. Federal competition brought energy to 98 per cent of Oregon's rural residents," he added.

Coon said the rates of private utilities were not out of line, since they had to build distribution lines, hire clerks and meter readers and undertake other expenses.

"The Northwest needs this project as soon as it can be built," he said. "To get the job done now, the John Day bill makes public and private agencies who will distribute the power pay for it in advance. We cannot wait for future generations to decide our power policy for us."

Coon's bill would allow local interests to put up much of the money for the dam, getting in return the power produced by the dam for 50 years.

Neuberger argued it would be better to wait for Congress to appropriate money for the dam with the Bonneville system then marketing the power.

A. Selander, Portland Artist, Will Instruct

Arthur Selander, noted Portland artist, will be in Roseburg next week to instruct local artists. He is now teaching at the Portland Art Center, and is noted for his help with beginning artists. Selander had a showing in Roseburg two years ago, and conducted a class here last summer.

The classes, sponsored by the Roseburg Art Assn., will be held daily starting Oct. 9, at the grounds set out at the fairgrounds. Sunday's class will begin at 1:30 p.m. The classes will start at 9 a.m. throughout the rest of the week.

For further information, interested persons may call Mrs. Jack Isaacson or Mrs. Jack West. Those desiring transportation may meet at the Roseburg library at 8:45 a.m.

White Flags Indicate Some Rebels Quitting

RABAT, French Morocco — White flags went up Thursday over small villages in the mid-Atlas mountains and along the Spanish Moroccan frontier, indicating that some rebel tribesmen in the zone of the latest uprising are ready to call it quits.

French officers on the spot were not optimistic that all trouble was ending. Fighting still continued at Tizi Ouzli, in eastern French Morocco near the frontier of the Spanish zone.

Although the military situation seemed to be getting slightly better, the political situation worsened, both in Morocco and in France.

In Paris, Premier Faure fired four Gaullist critics of his North African policy, including Defense Minister Pierre Koenig. There was speculation whether the Cabinet could survive the break.

Troops from Bour-el and Tizi Ouzli fought through ambushes and past mountain marksmen Wednesday and finally linked up with Moroccan cavalry from Ak-noul. They beat off a series of mass attacks that began Saturday against the triangle of outposts along the border between French and Spanish Morocco.

But the French were still menaced by the rebels holding positions in the surrounding mountains. Both sides apparently had been reinforced for a hard fight in the area where Abdel Krim, the veteran warrior, scored successes in the Rif war more than 30 years ago.

Critics Caustic In Denouncing Center Selection

PORTLAND — The decision to put Portland's eight million dollar sports center beside the Columbia River, six miles north of the city center, has not ended the dispute over location of the center.

Critics were caustic in denouncing the decision by the site selecting committee in a 3-2 vote Wednesday. They still argued in favor of a site in the center of Portland.

Some commented that Portland was building a fine sports center for Vancouver. The site selected is at the Oregon end of the bridge to Vancouver.

The newspaper The Oregonian said in an editorial that the decision was "a grave error... in direct contradiction of the great weight of expert testimony gathered during the months of site consideration."

Chairman James Polhemus, who cast the deciding ballot in the site committee, said the determining factor was the Pacific International Livestock Exposition.

Officials of the exposition had objected to a downtown site as being unsuitable for the stock show.

Mrs. Gates Appointed Caseworker For Welfare

The appointment of Mrs. Joseph (Martha) Gates as a caseworker for the Douglas County Public Welfare Dept. was announced this week by Administrator Mrs. Lois Baker.

Mrs. Gates started work with the department Monday. She is a graduate of the University of Washington in Seattle. Her husband is employed as a sanitarian with the county health office. They reside in Roseburg.

The new caseworker was active in youth work in the south while her husband was stationed there with the Navy, Mrs. Baker said.
