

'Complete And Careful' New Study Of Military Setup Ordered By Secretary Wilson

By ELTON C. FAY

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Wilson told Congress Thursday he has ordered the high command to make a "complete and careful" new study of the military setup in view of changes in weapons field and in the international situation.

He wants the picture of what may be needed in the next three years.

In testimony prepared for the Senate Armed Services Committee, Wilson also disclosed that military manpower will increase to about 2,840,000 by the end of the next fiscal year from the 2,814,000 estimated for June 30, the end of the current year.

He also said that to provide a "measure of flexibility" President Eisenhower has authorized a manpower ceiling of 2,900,000 for the next fiscal year. But Wilson said use of that authority will be made "only after complete justification for need and mission."

Wilson emphasized the build-up of the Air Force's strategic bomber fleet and the expanding guided missile program.

He said a "major portion" of procurement next year will be devoted to new weapons, including "large sums for missiles."

During the coming fiscal year, said Wilson, the Air Force will complete its planned build-up to 137 wings, an increase of 10 over present strength.

"The present planned build-up of SAC (Strategic Air Command) forces will be completed by June 30, 1956," Wilson said. "The medium bomber wings are already fully equipped with B47 jets. In the heavy bomber wings, major emphasis is now being given to the replacement of the B36 with the new B52 long range jet bomber. By the end of the coming fiscal year, a number of these wings will have been converted to the B52."

The Strategic Air Command is understood to consist presently of 50 of the 54 wings planned under the 137 wing program. Under that program, there eventually will be 11 wings of B52 heavy bombers. At present there are about seven wings of the piston-jet combination B36s.

Wilson said that "conversion of the B36 wings to B52s will be carried out "at an accelerated rate." He said, too, that "a substantial number of jet tankers for air-to-air refueling of the B52 bombers is also included in the Air Force program."

In announcing that large sums for missiles will be included in the buying program, Wilson said missiles "have been under accelerated development for some time."

In addition to the B52 procurement program, Wilson said emphasis is being placed on faster-than-sound fighters—the F8U and F3H Navy planes and the F101, F102 and F104 Air Force fighters.

He said the continental air defense system "will continue to grow in scope and effectiveness during the coming fiscal year."

In that connection he mentioned improvement and development of radar sites in the United States and, in cooperation with Canada, work on the mid-Canada and Distant Early Warning (DEW) line in the Far North. The "Texas towers," which are being built out in the sea at the edge of the continental shelf, will be expanded steadily, Wilson said.

He announced that the first segment of the new automatic warning-aircraft control system, known as "Sage," will "soon go into operation."

In this system data from warning nets is fed automatically into electronic computers and the information is flashed immediately to fighter planes and anti-aircraft batteries.

Here is the way Wilson described the make-up planned for services other than the Air Force as of the end of the next fiscal year:

Army—19 divisions, 10 regiments, 143 anti-aircraft battalions. An infantry division will be converted to an airborne division, to be used in "special experiments with new organizations, tactics and weapons." There will be an increase in Army units armed with new weapons like the Honest John bombardment rockets.

Navy—To have a total of 1,005 ships including 411 combatant vessels, compared with a present force of 984 ships including 403 warships.

Marine Corps—Continue at three divisions and three air wings.

House Subcommittee Studying Newsprint Deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House subcommittee studying newsprint supply problems is thinking about calling in some publishers to hear "their side of the story."

Rep. Klein (D-N.Y.), the subcommittee chairman, said Wednesday "we'd like to know what they'd say to do in case of an emergency when no newsprint was available."

A Commerce Department report received by the group Tuesday foresaw "an apparent substantial deficit" of newsprint "for some years to come."

Klein said he would talk over with the rest of his group the idea of taking testimony from publishers.

The New Yorker said his subcommittee was concerned about the small newspapers getting the newsprint they needed.
