What Makes Your Watch Tick?

BY JACK WEST

Your Grandfather's big watch ticked loudly. Its machinery was crude and heavy. You could hear it "breathing" all across the room. Its spoked wheel, spurred on by a husky mainspring, moved further and thus made a louder tick. Today, watches are a totally different breed. They're more refined, have much smaller parts, move noiselessly and you have to put them to your ear to detect any sound whatever. Yet small as they are and complicated as their working parts may be, you expect them to do their ticking continuously, marking off the seconds and minutes and hours. If you have ever looked through a jeweler's magnifying glass — worn in his right eye — you must have been amazed at the conglomeration of wheels and pinions and jewels you saw. Now bear in mind that all these are encased in an area as small as a quarter — and you realize how ingenious the watchmaker's art is. We take pride in the watches we sell. They all bear famous, trademarked names. They are all guaranteed to tell time faithfully so long as you give them reasonable care. Come in today and inspect our display of men's and women's watches. They're priced from $19.95 up. And sold on easy terms if you wish.
