Hollywood Stars Plead For Relief From High Taxes

WASHINGTON — A score of California and New York lawyers are seeking to convince the Internal Revenue Service that incorporated entertainers should be taxed like incorporated businesses.

They contend that some of the biggest names of Hollywood and television will be "ruined" financially if the revenue service enforces a proposed regulation.

Their hearing — probably this afternoon — was included on the crowded schedule of Bernard Payne, chief of the IRS regulations programs section.

The rule in effect would bar the film and TV stars from incorporating their "unique and personal services" in order to qualify for a maximum 52 per cent corporation rate on their large earnings instead of the individual income rate, which goes up to 91 per cent.

IRS could make the rule retroactive to Jan. 1, 1954, and claim back taxes to that date. Some movie people contend this would put them out of business. They predict it would drive many independent producers abroad.

Ben Chandler Hasn't Yet Quit Commission Post

PORTLAND — Ben R. Chandler said Wednesday he has not yet turned in his resignation from the Oregon Highway Commission, of which he is chairman.

He announced Tuesday he would not accept reappointment to the commission when his term expires March 31.

The Associated Press reported incorrectly that he already had submitted his resignation to Gov. Robert D. Holmes.

At Salem the governor said Wednesday he had asked Chandler to continue until Chandler's term expires.
