Digging Under Tower Gets Under Way For Treasure

LONDON — They started digging at the Tower of London Tuesday in search of the two million dollar treasure supposedly buried by a tyrannical 17th Century prison governor who made a bit on the side.

Three workmen moved the first earth from a cellar below the 16th Century governor's residence, which stands about 100 feet from where King Henry VIII had two wives executed.

Combined tests by a cave explorer, a water diver and two clairvoyants have produced this assessment: There may be buried treasure 10 feet below the cellar floor.

Back in 1632 a former goldsmith named Sir John Barkstead became governor of the tower and speedily built up a reputation of harshness and corruption unequalled in the history of that bloody fortress. He is generally admitted to have practiced extortion on the nobles and their ladies who were imprisoned in the tower.

In 1639, he was called before a committee of grievances and fled the country. But first — according to ancient records — he "put up 30,000 pounds in butter firkins (containers)" under the cellar.

Barkstead returned to England in 1662 and was hanged. Samuel Pepys, the diarist, was commissioned to search for the Barkstead fortune, but found nothing.

The latest search has been commissioned by the Ministry of Works after five years investigation by author Charles Quarell, secretary of Britain's Speleological (cave explorers) Society. By using an electronic device he has pinpointed sites below the governor's residence and below the bell tower, one of the 13 main turrets.

Bloodhound Finds Oregon Girl Pinned Under Log

DALLAS, Ore. — A search team using bloodhounds early Monday found a 15-year-old Lincoln, Ore., girl who had been pinned to the ground by a log since Sunday evening.

Folk County sheriff's deputy Virgil Taylor found Judy Meissner on the bank of the Willamette River, a 14-foot long, 12-inch thick log across her legs.

Taylor said the girl told him she went out to pick flowers along the river bank late Sunday afternoon. As she was returning home, Taylor said, she slipped from a log on which she was walking.

She fell to the ground, Taylor said, and another log which had been resting across the one on which she was walking fell on her.

Taylor said the girl, a sophomore at North Salem High School, apparently was in good condition, and did not require hospitalization.

The searchers were led to the girl at 4:30 a.m., Taylor said, by a bloodhound named Pluto, owned by Norman Wilson of Dallas, Ore. Lincoln is 20 miles northeast of here, and six miles north of West Salem.

Kaplan Quits Vice Probe With Final Blast At Thornton

PORTLAND — An attorney general's assistant quit the vice investigation in Portland Monday after a final letter of criticism over the way Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton is running the probe.

The assistant, Arthur G. Kaplan, said he was taking a staff job with the Senate committee on labor racketeering, arranged for some time ago. He said he had asked for a leave of absence to take the position.

Kaplan's letter, addressed to Thornton but with copies sent to newspapers, was highly critical of Thornton, speaking of "patent maladministration of the probe."

"Continued misdirection of the investigation will give added credence to those who believe you are attempting to whitewash this prosecution for political or other personal motives," the letter said.

Earlier a grand jury working with Kaplan issued a lengthy report that was critical of Thornton and called for his replacement at the head of the vice investigation.

Kaplan said Thornton had advised against indictments against several persons, including Mayor Terry Schruk of Portland, but the grand jury indicted the mayor on five counts anyway.

Thornton said he had advised against indictments where he thought there was not sufficient evidence of wrongdoing. Schruk is accused, among other things, of taking a bribe from a gambler and lying when he denied getting the money.

"Instead of running out, Mr. Kaplan should stay here, face the music and help us defend his indictments," Thornton said.

Runaway Boys Back In Seattle

SEATTLE — Two little boys who ran away from their Seattle homes for Disneyland and Mexico with thousands of dollars in cash and jewelry are home again.

Eddie Selasky, 12, and Richard Daly, 13, were met at the Seattle-Tacoma Airport last night by their parents, police and juvenile officers. The boys were picked up early yesterday in Los Angeles when they stepped off a San Francisco bus.

Los Angeles juvenile officers put the boys aboard a Western Air Lines plane which arrived in Seattle late last night. Officials at the lines had custody of more than $3,000 in cash, 14 diamond rings, a bracelet of $20 gold pieces, and a gold watch the Los Angeles officers found stuffed in the pockets of the motorcycle jackets the boys wore.

The cash and jewelry were held by the Seattle police for release later to the owners.

Eddie's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Selasky, and Richard's father, Peter Louie Daly, were at the airport.

French Miffed At Note Sent By Top Russian

PARIS — French officials view Soviet Premier Bulganin's latest note to the West as a bumbling effort to disrupt solidarity of the free world.

Officials declined public comment Monday as the government released Bulganin's 4,000-word letter to Premier Guy Mollet proposing French-Soviet talks as a preliminary to new big power disarmament negotiations. But privately they indicated they rubbed the French government the wrong way.

The letter, delivered in Paris Saturday, followed similar communications to Britain, Denmark, Norway and West Germany. It warned that any nation permitting U. S. atomic bases on its soil risked nuclear retaliation.

Dr. L. A. Banks' Poem Used By Loan Company

The late Dr. Louis Albert Banks, widely known Roseburg author, once wrote a feature, "Poem for the Day," for The News-Review. In the issue of May 9, 1950, he wrote a poem "The Growth of Confidence in Humanity," pertaining to the organization of the Personal Loan Department of the National City Bank of New York. The poem, according to J. Andrew Painter, vice president, was framed and has since hung in the department's central office.

TV Quiz Show Decision Disputed By Doctors

NEW YORK — Medical expert Hank Bloomgarden broke a television quiz show deadlock with artist Jim Snodgrass last night and won $25,000. But his triumph was disputed.

Bloomgarden was declared champion on NBC-TV's "Twenty One" after he had tied with Snodgrass six times. That brought the 28-year-old medical research consultant's total winnings on the show to $126,000.

Master of ceremonies Jack Barry called Snodgrass wrong on a question dealing with human anatomy. But doctors around the country called up to say the 34-year-old New York artist was right.

Anti-American Feeling Mounts Over Incident

TOKYO — The big Tokyo newspaper Yomiuri said today "stepped up anti-American feelings" will result if an American soldier accused of shooting a Japanese woman on a firing range is not tried by a Japanese court.

Yomiuri also declared that the jurisdiction dispute over Specialist J.C. William S. Girard of Ottawa, Ill., could complicate Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi's June visit to Washington. Kishi is scheduled to discuss a readjustment of U. S.-Japanese relations with American leaders.

Girard has been indicted by a Japanese court on charges of bodily injury resulting in the death of the woman on a military firing range. She was struck by an empty rifle cartridge case while collecting scrap metal.

The U. S. Far East Command announced last week it had yielded to Japan the right to try the soldier, but the decision was held up after Secretary of Defense Wilson ordered a full review of the case. Surrender of jurisdiction caused strong protests in the United States.

Yomiuri predicted that there will be "louder voices urging revision of the Japanese-U. S. security pact" if Japan is not finally given the right to try Girard.

Pre-Study On Salary Hikes Ellsworth Plan

WASHINGTON — Chairman Harris Ellsworth of the Civil Service Commission recommended Monday that proposed pay raises for government employees await a study now being made. He urged that a co-ordinated pay system be worked out whenever a pay raise is granted.

Ellsworth testified before a Senate Postoffice and Civil Service subcommittee which is considering pay raises for postal employees and some other government workers.

Sen. Neuberger (D-Ore), chairman of the group, mentioned that government executives and even members of Congress have received substantial pay raises in recent years.

Tractor Leaps Bank, Kills Worker At Dam

BAKER, Ore. — Goldie Johnson, 47, Boise, Idaho, was killed Monday when a tractor he was driving plunged over a steep bank at the Brownlee Dam site, 50 miles northeast of here on the Snake River.

Johnson, an employe of the Morrison-Knudsen Construction Co., was pinned underneath the tractor, according to Glen Johnson, construction superintendent of the firm building the dam for the Idaho Power Co.

He is survived by the widow and one child.
