Upward Game Bird Prospects Dimmed By Wind And Weather

By JACK HEWINS
Associated Press Sports Writer
The upland birds of the Pacific Northwest have taken a beating from spring and winter weather in the past two years and the outlook for next fall's hunting season ranges from pessimism in Oregon to mild optimism in Washington. In both states the hopes for fall shooting hang on the trend of the weather in the first couple of weeks in June.

That's when the ringnecks will be hatching. Wet, chilly weather could destroy the broods and leave the Northwest with almost a pheasantless fall.

Game department officials of both states agree, however, that a favorable nesting season could give hunters in both states much better shooting than they had last year.

Burton Lauckhart, chief game biologist for the Washington Department of Game points out that the flood year of 1948 was followed by the poorest hunting season in 10 years. "But in 1949," he added, "the pheasants bounced back and that was the best hunting season in 10 years."

The Oregon Game Commission reported this week a survey of the breeding stocks of pheasants and valley quail "indicates a general statewide decline."

Lauckhart, after a check with department field men, said the Washington outlook was less dismal. Although the pheasant kill last year was the lowest in several years, he said there appears to be a good carryover of brood stock.

Running counter to the trend, Yakima County provided better hunting last fall than in 1955. The picture there and in the Columbia Basin is very promising, he said, and there is hope for improvement in Okanogan County. Brood stocks are down slightly in Walla Walla, Whitman and Spokane Counties and about normal in Kittitas County.

Although hard hit by the winter weather, the quail and chukar partridge nest later than the ringnecks and Lauckhart believes both breeds will come back strongly. Big families are the rule among the quail and chukars.

The decline in Oregon brood stocks was heaviest in the Willamette Valley and Crook, Deschutes, Gilliam, Lake, Wallowa and Wasco Counties east of the mountains, the commission reported. There were increases in Baker, Jackson, Jefferson and Umatilla Counties.

Oregon finds further cause for pessimism in reports from its field agents. "Drainage, cutting of brush and clean fence row farming have seriously affected the habitat" in the Wallowa area, said one.

From Malheur County, "Ground clearing, underground irrigation systems, extensive burnings, weed spraying, intensive pasturing of draws and ditch banks, and more row crop land, coupled with bird dogs and house cats allowed to run loose, and 100-mph automobiles make the future pheasant picture rather dim in this area."

Lauckhart says the same habitat problems are common to Washington but he feels they have eased in recent years. And the department hopes the soil bank program will reverse the trend.

"By taking land out of cultivation it should restore nesting areas to some extent," he concluded.

Tighe, of course, hopes it's the former and there's plenty of evidence to support his hope. In Lary's first full season with the Tigers, in 1955, he was able to win only two of his first six decisions but wound up with a 15-15 record with a 2.13 record.

The Tigers expected even bigger things from Lary this year. Instead, when Washington defeated Detroit 2-1 last night, it not only reduced the Tigers' fourth place margin over Boston to a half game but was Lary's fifth defeat against two triumps — the identical record he had at this date a year ago.

Herb Score's Sight Improved Says MD

CLEVELAND — A Cleveland eye specialist Tuesday permitted Herb Score, Cleveland Indians pitcher, to walk around his room at Lakeside Hospital for the first time since he suffered an eye injury when hit by a line drive.

Dr. Charles I. Thomas said that the date the 23-year-old ace left-hander can leave the hospital still "depends on the response to treatment." He added that the sight of the injured eye has improved during the past week, but it is anticipated that the repair process will go on for some time yet.

X-rays of the injury were to be analyzed Tuesday and other tests are to be made in the next few days.

Score was hit in the right eye by a line drive in a night game with the New York Yankees here May 7.

Dr. Thomas said Score's appetite is getting back to normal and that he looks fine.

"Looking at him, you'd never know he has been injured," he said.
