Jury Verdict That Cleared
Mayor Schrunk Televised
For Portland And Seattle

PORTLAND — The verdict that cleared Mayor Terry Schrunk of a perjury charge Friday night was televised over Portland and Seattle stations.

Officials of KGW-TV in Portland and its sister station, KING-TV in Seattle, said it was only the third time in this country that a courtroom verdict had been broadcast.

A camera placed in the doorway between the court and the chambers of Circuit Judge James Crawford caught the drama as the verdict was read and the packed courtroom, despite warnings from the judge, burst into applause.

The camera focused on the jurors as they returned from their deliberations, and then switched to Schrunk as the verdict was read.

The 44-year-old mayor bowed his head for a moment, and afterward rose to respond to the well-wishers who crowded around him.

"I feel wonderful," he said. "I'm tired, but I'm very happy. I've said ever since this fight began that I knew what the facts were and the good Lord knew. That gave me strength to go ahead."

"This is vindication for all time," said his attorney, Edwin Hicks. "I expect the bribery charge to fall now, since it is the same case. The other indictments, if they come to trial, will be taken care of in due course."

He was referring to other charges returned against Schrunk last March. Two of those stem from a sheriff's raid in which wiretap evidence was seized last year at the home of Raymond Clark, an employee of racketeer Big Jim Elkins. Schrunk, the former sheriff, was accused of conspiracy to seize wiretapped recordings and of illegally copying them after the seizure.

The mayor's wife cried in relief after the verdict was read, but joy soon became the dominant note in the courtroom. The crowd stayed on a half-hour in what became an impromptu victory celebration. Almost to the last person, the crowd was composed of supporters of the mayor.

Only three persons were seen leaving early. They were the state prosecutors.
