

Fair Trade System Seems Unlikely To Get Any Help From Congress Very Soon

WASHINGTON — The faltering "fair trade" system seems unlikely to get any help from Congress, at least for the immediate future.

Members who have wrestled with the retail price fixing problem in the past displayed a strong aversion Thursday to reviving the "fair trade" controversy.

"Most of us don't want it to come up," said one House member who has played a key role in past legislation on the subject. "Fair trade" is a system that permits manufacturers, with state and federal sanction, to fix and enforce minimum retail prices on brand name and patented products.

Struck Major Blow

This system, suffering steady attrition under state and federal court decisions in the past five years, was struck a major blow Wednesday when General Electric abandoned its long-standing air trade policy on electrical home appliances. The firm told retailers to set their own prices.

In Chicago, the Sunbeam Corp. also ordered elimination of its "fair trade" policy on small appliances, effective Thursday. It said it acted for competitive reasons.

Since 1914 Congress has grappled with the problem of legalizing retail price fixing. It was not until the depression of the 1930s, when collapse of the price structure bankrupted thousands of storekeepers, that Congress acted to sanction establishment of a price floor on trade-name products to prevent price-cutting.

New Law Enacted

Then it enacted the Miller-Tydings Act, which exempted manufacturers from the antitrust laws by allowing them to enter into price fixing agreements with retailers in states which permitted such agreements.

In 1951, however, the Supreme Court ruled the act unconstitutional.

Congress then passed the McGuire Act. This law re-established the principle of the Miller-Tydings Act and subjected retailers to civil penalties for price-cutting whether or not they were parties to a "fair trade" agreement.

Since then, however, courts in 11 states outlawed state fair trade statutes and two other states abandoned their laws. Some efforts currently are being directed at enactment of a federal fair trade law.

No Bottles Blow Tops Around Noted Doctor

SEAFORD, N.Y. — With a Duke University psychologist on hand yesterday, no bottles blew their tops nor did objects fly in the home of the James Herrmann family.

Since Feb. 3, the Herrmanns—the parents and Lucille, 13, and James Jr., 12—have reported flying objects in their six-room ranch home. In addition to bottles blowing their screw tops, other things have whizzed through the air—including a portable phonograph.

The Duke specialist, Dr. J. Gaither Pratt, is a member of the university's parapsychology laboratory, which investigates such things as "extrasensory perception" and other seemingly unexplainable phenomena.

Pratt is trying to determine if young James could be influencing things. He has been close at hand after every incident. Nobody has seen the boy put the objects in motion physically. Whether he is doing so mentally is another matter.

Voluntary Services Plan Refresher Course Wednesday

Voluntary Services Advisory Committee of the Veterans Hospital will meet Monday in the music room of the recreation building at 7:30 p.m.

Next Wednesday a refresher course for volunteers will be given in the music room at 7:30. All volunteers are asked to attend. Volunteers are needed to write letters for patients. Anyone interested is asked to contact their hospital representative or call the Chief, Special Services, at the hospital.

All volunteers are invited to a skating party given by the Employees Assn., Friday at the Rolatta Skating Rink.

Recently the Eastern Oregon College of Education band gave a concert for the veterans, and the Blue Star Mothers sponsored a dance. The Springfield American Legion Auxiliary Unit 40 made a visitation to the hospital during the weekend. Two parties were held recently with square dancing, modern dancing, and card games included. The Roseburg Bowl sponsored a bowling film and bowling demonstration last week.

School Too Much For Young Boy

MISSION, Kan. — The question was propounded in an English class at Shawnee-Mission High School yesterday and it had to do with the literary merits of "Walden Pond," an essay by E. B. White.

"What's in Walden Pond?" asked Loren E. Simpson, the teacher, planning a discussion of Henry David Thoreau, Massachusetts writer-philosopher who lived there.

"Water," said Larry P. Yeakle, 17-year-old junior, a quiet, strapping big boy—6 ft. 2, 190 pounds.

The class laughed. Larry was found shot to death last night in his bedroom. Dr. R. D. Grayson, county coroner, said it was a self-inflicted wound.

There was a note, Larry instructed his father Donald N. Yeakle, a tire salesman, on disposition of his car and payment of his bills.

It added: "I see no possible future for me. Most of my trouble, as you know, has been school. They want me to write a term paper in English, do a project in business."

"My Simpson: I still think there was water in Walden Pond," Simpson said there was no ridicule in the laughter and he cannot imagine what went on in Larry's mind afterward.

"He certainly had a future," Simpson said. "He was a swell boy, always smiling, pleasant, adding something to your day—as he did with his answer about Walden Pond."

Radio Station KOAC Will Be Kept By State

PORTLAND — The state system of higher education Wednesday night said overwhelming public support has ensured continued operation of state-owned radio station KOAC.

The system's General Extension Division earlier this month held four hearings on whether the educational station should be dropped.

One suggestion was that the radio station be abandoned and its funds used to expand the facilities of a state-owned television station, KOAC-TV.

Only one person at the hearings, however, spoke out for the station's sale, said Dr. James Sherburne, dean of the extension division.

Sherburne said this support, coupled with that received by mail, has made KOAC's sale out of the question.

"The enthusiastic public support for KOAC programing has given all of us the full assurance we had hoped for," he said. This support, he added, "has assured continued operation."

The station's main studios are at Corvallis.

And at Corvallis Wednesday night, Dr. A. L. Strand, president of Oregon State College, said the wave of support probably will mean a bigger budget for KOAC.

The station also has studios at Eugene, Salem and Portland.

Its extension division said the station is received in an area in which 800,000 persons live.

The station operates from 10 a. m. to 10 p. m. Monday through Saturday.

Its most popular programs, the division said, are broadcasts of classical music, market and farm reports and news and weather information.

KOAC's education programs also are used by public school teachers throughout much of the state.

GOING HOME — Mrs. Florence Doering makes a last-minute check of her airline schedule just prior to her departure from San Francisco for her home in Australia. She has agreed to divorce her American husband, John K. Doering, of Woodland, Calif., and let him keep custody of their two children.

GI Bride Was 'Beaten Before' She Started

SYDNEY, Australia — Mrs. Frances Doering, GI bride who renounced her claim for custody of her two young children in Oroville, Calif., last week, said Thursday: "I was beaten before I started."

Mrs. Doering returned to Sydney by plane after a two-week trip to the United States to try to regain custody of her two children, 14-year-old Carol and Lorraine Kay, 5.

The court granted her husband, John Doering of Oroville, a divorce and gave him custody of the children. It ordered him to pay Mrs. Doering's fare to the United States on alternate years beginning in 1960 to see the children.

The woman tearfully told newsmen on her arrival in Sydney: "I never got to see them on their own. I always had to see them with my husband's people present."

Florence Beardsley Speaks At AAUW Meet

Miss Florence Beardsley, Director of Elementary Education in the State Department of Education, was guest speaker at a lovely dinner meeting of the Roseburg Branch of AAUW held on a recent Thursday evening in the Gold Room of the Hotel Umpqua.

Miss Beardsley was introduced by Mrs. Adrian M. Lofland, chairman of the Status of Women committee. She spoke on the status of women in today's world and presented some startling facts pertaining to conditions in the atomic era into which civilization is now launched.

With a look into the future, Miss Beardsley warned her audience of the threat to woman in the present trend towards youthful marriage wherein the young people find themselves confronted with the need for gainful employment by both to meet the financial demands of present living standards. In many cases, this status of the young mother precludes the college training so needed in the management and training of her children. She concluded with the statement that our nation has succeeded in the abolition of one group of slaves and now faces the possibility of setting free the "second set of slaves"—our young women.

Miss Beardsley warned the college women to seriously consider the situation and challenged them to active participation in a study of conditions. She said that state support of kindergarten schools was deleted by the last session of the state Legislature and called attention to the handicap of this action.

About sixty members of the local AAUW were in attendance at the dinner. The speaker's table was centered with a lovely arrangement of pussywillows and the Valentine Day motif. Mrs. Ralph Huestis, chairman of the social committee, had charge of arrangements for the meeting.
