

Soviet's Phony Maneuver, Expected In U.S., Regarded As Red Propaganda Collapse

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Foreign News Analyst

Moscow's announcement of a Soviet intention to end nuclear weapons tests is part of a determined ideological struggle on a world scale.

To gauge the real meaning of the announcement, it must be compared with concurrent statements intended only for the Communists.

Among such pronouncements is one which dramatically belied Soviet peaceful intentions where the political war was concerned. The monthly Kommunist, bible for Reds around the world, recently warned:

"It should be noted that Communists' efforts to insure peaceful coexistence of two systems not only does not remove the question of an ideological struggle, but on the contrary promotes a competition of ideas to a leading position. Rejection of competition of ideas would mean in fact capitulation to the ideology of monopolistic capital and reaction, and would bring the danger of war closer."

U.S. Not Deceived

Such statements, stripped to essentials, mean the Communists outside the U.S.S.R. not only must avoid relaxing their efforts, but must sharpen their struggle to install Soviet influence. In this light, the nuclear weapons tests announcement becomes a most valuable instrument for a political offensive on a broad front.

The Kremlin maneuver was expected in Washington, with full knowledge of the propaganda defeat it indicated. For almost a week American policy makers waited for the blow to fall, without much having been done in advance to counter its telling effect.

The Moscow move expresses the boldness of the man who now dominates, in name as well as in fact, both the party and government of the U.S.S.R. Nikita Khrushchev, premier and party boss, is a good gambler. In this gamble, he calculated that the United States was in a poor position to call his hand.

Taking over the premiership from Nikolai Bulganin, Khrushchev was hailed in the Soviet press as the man "whose name is inseparably connected with the outstanding success of the conduct of the Soviet Union's peace-loving foreign policy." But at the same time the Soviet press carefully characterized Khrushchev's efforts as "Leninist."

Attack Via Back Door

A Leninist attack requires Communists to find small sparks and fan them into flame, to strike toward lines of least resistance. Khrushchev has been doing this.

The nuclear test announcement, no matter how the U.S.S.R. intends to perform on it, unquestionably will make a big splash in Asia and Africa, which Khrushchev considers areas of least resistance to the combined Communist political and economic drives. Having chosen his targets, Khrushchev sticks tenaciously to his preconceived line, apparently confident the way to influence in Europe is through a back door opened in Asia and Africa.

Khrushchev's bold thrust requires an American answer—imaginative and equally bold.
