Woman Has Door Bricked, Keeping Minister Inside

FONDI, Italy (AP) — A bucket and a 20-foot rope kept the Rev. Umberto Righetti in touch with the world Wednesday. His Catholic landlady had the Protestant minister bricked up inside a palace.

Unperturbed, the minister appeared at his second story window and sang Protestant hymns.

It happened this way: The Rev. Mr. Righetti came to this Catholic town 75 miles south of Rome eight years ago and gradually built up a Church of Christ congregation of about 350 members.

Recently he rented rooms for residence and church services in an old baronial palace.

But there is only one door to his new quarters, and it is owned by Mrs. Gemma Rasile, who has rooms on the ground floor.

Mrs. Rasile, a Catholic, said she wouldn't put up with Protestants trooping in and out her door.

When she warned the minister the world service department, Mrs. Donald Kelley, local service chairman, asked for volunteers to serve on the housekeeping committee.

she planned to have it bricked up, he tried to have a new doorway cut. But the provincial superintendent of fine arts, who has the job of keeping old buildings unchanged, said he couldn't.

Mrs. Rasile's bricklayers showed up Tuesday. The Rev. Mr. Righetti refused to come out and the door was sealed.

The minister said he was prepared to wait it out. With the bucket and rope, he pulled up groceries provided by his church members.
