Fulton Lewis Jr. Surprise Witness In Libel Trial

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — National radio commentator Fulton Lewis Jr. appeared as a surprise defense witness Thursday in the U.S. district court trial of a $450,000 libel suit against three Oklahoma radio stations.

Lewis defended his disputed Jan. 6, 1956, newscast, which is the basis for the suit by Mrs. Pearl Wanamaker, prominent Washington state educator and leader in the 1955 White House Conference on Education.

Mrs. Wanamaker filed the libel action against stations KOCY in Oklahoma City, KGWA in Enid and KOMA in Tulsa, all of which carried Lewis' broadcast.

In response to questions from his attorney, Dave Milsten of Tulsa, Lewis said he received a "hallstorm" of complaints from delegates who attended the 1955 education conference in Washington, D.C.

"They claimed the conference, which was using the new group dynamics method of discussion, was subject to being rigged or stacked," Lewis said. "They asked me to give it my attention."

Lewis said he spent many hours conferring with "dissatisfied" delegates to the convention.

Lewis charged that the sessions were dominated by professional educators.

Mrs. Wanamaker in suits filed here and in other cities throughout the country, has charged that Lewis libeled her in his remarks in connection with criticism of the White House conference and also by mistakenly confusing her with another Washington state woman whose brother had been linked with communism.

Lewis flew here Wednesday night.

Roseburg Building Permits Increase; Trend Followed

Roseburg had a building permit increase of nearly 70 per cent in April, following a trend over the rest of the Pacific Northwest.

Equitable Savings and Loan Assn., Portland, said permits in the Northwest soared to a 17-year record during the month, with a permit for a Portland shopping center, mainly responsible. But even without the $21,300,000 permit Northwest construction apparently was on the rise.
