Women's Rights Effort Began 110 Years Ago

SENECA FALLS, N. Y. — Today is the 110th anniversary of the modern world's first organized battle for women's rights, which began in this tiny central New York village.

On July 19, 1848, a group of strong-willed women and a handful of brave men sat down in the Wesleyan Methodist Church and hammered out agreement on a women's bill of rights.

The movement had many roots, but today's disgruntled males have only their trousered ancestors to blame for the principal one—the refusal of man to give woman her say in temperance and abolitionist circles.

The ladies, rebuffed in their efforts to take part in those two organized among themselves. Anti-slavery and antialcohol led quickly to antimen, and as the above mentioned disgruntled males would say, now look at us.

Another root, a more personal one, was a friendship between Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton and a veteran abolitionist named Lucretia Mott.

In June of 1848, the liberal wing regional meeting in nearby Waterloo, Mrs. Mott, wife of a Quaker educator from Philadelphia, attended.

Mrs. Stanton had the carriage hitched up and drove over from her home in Seneca Falls to see her old friend. One scrap of conversation led to another, and a call to arms was issued.

The first women's rights convention was set for July 19.

Child Causes Anxious Moments In Cincinnati

CINCINNATI — It was an agonizing five minutes for onlookers in downtown Cincinnati yesterday, but Alma Lee Sanders, 17 months old, just thought it was fun.

The youngster stretched, waved her arms, looked around, sat down and dangled her feet, laughed and shouted: "Look at the doggy!"

She was pointing at the dog in the street four floors below her apartment home. The girl had climbed out a window to a narrow ledge while her mother slept.

A workman in the street ran up stairs to hammer on the apartment door, wake Mrs. Lois Sanders and get her daughter inside.

Ships Mothballing Halted At Seattle

SEATTLE (AP) — The mothballing of several Military Sea Transportation Service ships which had been slated to retire to the reserve fleet has been halted because of the Middle East situation, an MST spokesman said.

"We're not reactivating the ships," said Capt. N. A. Lidstone, commander of the MSTs in the North Pacific, "but we're holding the inactivation at the status quo."

Lidstone did not name the vessels involved but it was reported that they include four transports. The Times identified them as the Gen. H. B. Freeman and the Gen. John Pope, which were being inactivated at the Todd Shipyard here; the Gen. M. C. Meigs, at Pier 90, Seattle, and the Marine Phoenix, at Everett.

The Times said these and nine other vessels of various types were scheduled for inactivation as an economy move several weeks ago. Some of the ships already are in the reserve fleet at Olympia.
